The summer movie season is just about upon us — roaring in like a lion — with promises of big-budget action extravaganzas, sly comedies, heartfelt romances, tense dramas and art house hopefuls. As a rule, no summer ever lives up to its incessant hype and even the most seemingly foolproof movie can fail to deliver. But there are always surprises, and this year's list of releases lives up to that edict. So, hold on to your wallet and check out what the players have lined-up for eager summer audiences.

Action-adventure

The big news here is that there isn't a sequel in the bunch. Hollywood is still resting on its laurels, however, conjuring up new packages for some of action's biggest stars.

First up is Arnold Schwarzenegger in the action/fantasy The Last Action Hero. Coupled with crackerjack action director John McTiernan (Die Hard), Hero is all about a pre-teen movie fan who steps into the silver screen to join his hero. It promises to be the summer's biggest flick . . . but not if Steven Spielberg's mammoth production of Michael Crichton's bestselling book Jurassic Park has anything to say about it. Laura Dern and Richard Attenborough are among the stars of this blockbuster wannabe that's about dinosaurs genetically recreated for the ultimate theme park.

Sylvester Stallone leaves limp comedies behind and goes to the Rockies in Cliffhanger. Northern Exposure's Janine Turner and John Lithgow co-star in this rock-climbing adventure with plenty of close calls. If it's half as good as its breathtaking trailer, Stallone just might make moviegoers forget Stop! Or My Mom Will Shoot.

Clint Eastwood plays a secret service agent in pursuit of a deadly presidential assassin (John Malkovich) in the high-voltage suspense flick In the Line of Fire. Harrison Ford takes on the one-armed man in an adaptation of the old TV show The Fugitive. Sean Connery and Wesley Snipes play detectives searching for the murder of a young woman in the U.S. offices of a Japanese conglomerate in Rising Sun.

Mario Van Peebles, director of New Jack City, helms the Western actioner Posse, with Stephen Baldwin and Billy Zane along for the ride. Bruce Willis is a detective teamed with a new partner played by Honeymoon In Vegas' Sarah Jessica Parker, in the action-comedy Striking Distance. Jason Scott Lee (no relation) takes on the role of a lifetime in Dragon: The Bruce Lee Story.

Comedy

If high body counts and pulse raising isn't up your alley, Hollywood has an impressive cache of comedies, high and low, to make you laugh.

Kevin Kline stars as an ordinary guy recruited by the White House to stand in for the president in Dave. Twins' director

Go out on a limb & Listen to This

By KEN MAIURI
Collegian Staff

I went out on a limb last week and bought some discs I didn't know much about, thereby saving you, the beautiful readers of this column, the agony of buying a disappointing disc. The results were pleasantly surprising, so prick up your ears and, well, you know.

Mouth By Mouth
His Name Is Alive
4 A.D.

Caution: this album contains the coolest song of the year so far — "Baby Fish Mouth." It's hypnotically beautiful, shifting between ambient keyboards, raw drums and layers of both acoustic and churning electric guitars, while the angelic voice of Karin Oliver sings, "Even Adam in the garden/ breathe the air and walk around." It's elusive and buries itself in your mind. And that's just the first song!

His Name Is Alive, a three-person ensemble, has made a most interesting and unexplainable smorgasbord of song types and structures; each of the 16 tracks sound completely different, from the Unrest-ish "Lip" to the sampled-violins-and-voice "Cornfield" to the "you find the melody" warbled guitar overdrive of "Drink, Dress and Ink." Just when you think you can follow where the song is going, it swerves around a corner and smacks you into a wall. Extremely atmospheric, it sounds like nothing else. Buy it, bring it home, turn out the lights and listen. A-

Story of My Life
Pere Ubu
Imago Records

For a band that was once defiantly odd, almost unsettling to listen to, Pere Ubu has jettisoned virtually all of the computer blip effects and atonal, dissonant guitar, leaving some downright boring songs to be released on their eleventh album. Beginning with 1989's Cloudland, (a quirky masterpiece — get it now!) each successive disc has become milder, derivative and yawn-inducing.

Luckily lead yelper David Thomas is still an ultra-weird guy (he yells things and makes gestures at invisible people and wanders the stage during their live performances) and a bit of that manages to surface on the albums best tracks ("Wasted," "Louisiana Train Wreck" and "Story of My Life").

The title track in particular shows how far the band has come: it begins with a funk beat, adding a layer of booming guitars and synths and just when you expect the big verse, the song breaks down to a bouncy bass-and-drums riff that could serve well as a Saturday morning cartoon theme song, while Thomas narrates a humorous and surprisingly normal tale about growing up (well, except for the part about discovering the secret of anti-gravity: "It's such a simple trick; I hope I can remember it"). It's a pleasant album, but Cloudland is the one to get if you're Ubu-curious. B

Copacetic
Velocity Girl
Sub Pop Records

I bought this thing the second it came out because I had heard one Velocity Girl song that I loved; I didn't know the name of it but it had impressive vocals, great guitars and a catchy melody. I assumed the song would be on the debut album, but alas — "My Forgotten Favorite" is just that.

The songs that do appear aren't as wonderful as the one mentioned above, but "Pop Loser," "Pretty Sister" and "Audrey's Eyes" come close. Velocity Girl walk the line between My Bloody Valentine-noise and Smiths-jangle with enough balance that they could be the next Big Alternative Thing. Not a great album by any means, but the potential is certainly there. B-

Westing (By Musket and Sextant)
Pavement
Drag City Records

It's the Pavement noise-fest litmus test. At first listen, this collection of early singles seems unlistenable. It's even lower-fi than their Slanted and Enchanted disc (Buy It.) and is noticeably noisier than their Watery, Domestic EP (get that too, if your wallet has anything left in it). But give it a couple listens and the melodies and riffs suddenly leap out. Simply put, this album will grow on you.

Yes, there is some crud on the disc (good luck sitting through either version of "Recorder Grot"), but most tracks are perfect examples of how Pavement works. For instance, "Debris Slide" sounds identical to the Pixies' "Debaser" (and Sugar's "A Good Idea," for that matter) and the lyrics are, "Maybe she is/ maybe she's not/ maybe we is/ wheeze and cough/ wheeze and cough/ ba ba ba da ba — debris slide!" But the song works. As do other fragmentary tunes like "Box Elder," "Forklift," "Angel Carver Blues/ Mellow Jazz Docent" and "My First Mine." Trust me: stick with it and you'll even be humming "Heckler Spray" for weeks. A-

Spring Jam promises cool tunes

Looking for some tunes, food and great times? Sigma Phi Epsilon's Spring Jam is just the ticket on Saturday as the fraternity hosts what promises to be the biggest and best party next to Spring Concert.

From 12:30 to 5:30 p.m., Sig-Ep's Spring Jam will be the place to be. Falcetti Music Centers sponsors a Battle of the Bands, featuring local faves Borderline, Thunderbox, Granmothers Garden, Burnt Toast and Cruel Spoons. All will vie for equipment from Falcetti, so expect each band to be in top form.

Grandmothers Garden hails from Westfield, Mass. and has been together for four years. Self-describing their original songs as "emotive expression," the band plans to give it their best shot.

You may have seen Borderland, the five-piece unit that plays "funk for all times," around the Valley, but it's always great to see them again.

Thunderbox's unique sound comes from infulences ranging from "Metallica, to Kiss, to the Beatles," while Burnt Toast plays covers of classic party rock sounds from the last three decades. Also playing will be big surprise Cruel Spoons.

You'll get a chance to catch this entertaining line-up on a huge out-

Car care tips for the mechanically impaired

By AMY REYNOLDS
Generation X Press

Attention car illiterates: You say you know nothing about automobiles, how to fix them, maintain them and take care of them?

Now you will.

David Arnold, a recent graduate with an associate degree in diesel technology and an employee at Caterpillar Heavy Equipment Co. has has some helpful tips that can save you money and aggravation in several areas of basic automobile maintenance.

Tires

"When you put gas in your car, get in the habit of going around and looking at the tires," Arnold says. "You can get used to what they're supposed to look like."

He suggests checking the air in your tires about once every two weeks. If you need to add air to your tires and aren't sure how much, check the side of the tire —manufacturers print the amount of air a tire needs, usually between 32 and 35 psi, on the smooth surface between the tread and where the tire fits onto the rim.

If a tire is low on air, it can affect your car's fuel efficiency and it can cause the tires to wear unevenly and more quickly.

Oil

Oil is perhaps the single most important aspect to maintaining your car or truck.

Basically, oil is responsible for lubricating engine parts and creating viscosity, which refers to the degree to which a fluid (in this case oil) resists flow under an applied force (the engine parts).

When dirt and other particles, some smaller than the eye can detect, get into the oil, it breaks down, allowing for a lower level of viscosity, Arnold says.

"If you don't change your oil, it will break down and be less efficient. It won't keep the internal parts of the engine from rubbing together," he says.

Oil also helps cool the engine, the bearings, the rods and the valve stem, Arnold says.

Arnold says you should change your oil and oil filter, which helps keep dirt and other particles out of your oil, every 3,000 miles.

He suggests that you use the type of oil recommended by your car's manufacturer. That information is in your owner's manual.

Oils vary by weight, among other things, and Arnold says that generally speaking cars exposed to colder climates require a lower weight oil while cars exposed to warmer climates year-round usually call for a higher weight oil.

Some newer oil products, like Slick 50, contain teflon that will coat the engine parts, Arnold says.

The products with teflon can help your car avoid damage when you start it since oil sits in the car's oil pan for about three or four seconds before it gets to the engine.

Arnold adds that you should also check your car or truck's air filter every four to six months because it also helps filter out dirt, dust, etc.

If you live in an area where your car may be filtering more particles, such as off a dusty road, you should check your air filter more frequently.

Transmission

"Automatic transmission is easy to check. All you do is open the hood of your car and look to the back of the motor near the firewall," Arnold says. "Keep your car running, in neutral. If you notice a burning smell, have the transmission checked."

He also suggest checking for oil leaks.

"A good thing to try to do is park in the same place all the time. Look for oil or other fluids left on the pavement to detect a problem with leaking," he says.

If your car has a standard transmission you can ask a mechanic to check it for you.

Brakes

Generally speaking, cars need new brake pads every 30,000 miles.

"But," Arnold says, "it really depends on the driver. You're supposed to slow down gradually to stop your car rather than just quickly hitting the brakes. If you do hit the brakes quickly, the pads will wear more quickly."

If brake pads are not checked and allowed to wear thin, they can make grooves in the rotor.

The rotor works with the brake pads to stop a car. An easy way to picture the setup of the brakes is as a sandwich — the brake pads are the bread while the rotor is the meat in-between. To stop a car, the brake pads clamp down on both sides of the rotor, which has a smooth surface.

If the brake pads wear through and make grooves on the rotor, then your brakes will not be as effective — they will not be able to use the entire surface of the rotor to create friction to stop, but rather will only be able to use the grooves that have formed, Arnold says.

Arnold says dirt and other particles can get into the brakes and sometimes cause some squeaking.

"When you wash your car, get into the habit of spraying the brake pads to get some of the dirt out of there," he says.

The brake pads are positioned behind your car's tires. Arnold says if the squeaking continues, get your brakes checked because it is a sign that your brakes may need adjusting," he says.

Gasoline

Arnold says that the quality of gasoline you use can contribute to the longevity of your car if you have a fuel injection system.

The fuel injection does exactly what it implies — it injects fuel directly into the car's combustion system.

Cheaper fuels have deposits that can clog a fuel injection system and can cause a carbon buildup.

Arnold suggests using the highest octane gasoline for fuel injected cars. He also says that you should use a fuel injector cleaner, available at most gas stations and auto parts stores, to clean your system every 12,000 to 15,000 miles.

"Stick to the bigger-name gasolines (like Speedway, Texaco or Mobil, for example) because they're less likely to contain deposits," he says.

"You should get at least two estimates on your car if it needs to be repaired," Arnold says.

He suggests getting one estimate from a national, established shop like Midas, for example, and one form a smaller, local, "side of the road" place and compare the two.

Usually, Arnold says, the established, professional automobile repair shops will not try to rip you off.

He also suggests staying away from dealers' service departments because they're usually much more expensive (unless, obviously, your car is still under warranty).

If you are mechanically inclined and want to try to repair

Another fine effort from Blues Traveler

Save His Soul
Blues Traveler
A&M Records

John Popper is one of the single greatest talents in music today. Unfortunately, there may be something more expansive than Popper's musical abilities — his ego. On this, the Blues Traveler's third release, Popper again is the possessor of the one weak link, the one obstructions that keeps the band from superstardom — his voice.

Save His Soul has been anticipated for quite some time, especially by the Blues Traveler's continually growing number of truly devoted followers. The album is certainly worth the wait as the quartet utilizes their formula of blue-eyed soul with melodic and stylish hooks capped by harmonica wizardry and takes it a step farther. The group adds more guitar, a little humor and more polish, all the while making Popper's voice less of a liability.

With their self-titled 1990 debut, 1991's Travelers and Thieves and now Save His Soul, Blues Traveler has amassed a following reserved only for those special few bands who can produce an entirely unique performance each and every night depending on the chemistry and inspiration of the musicians. Groups like Phish, the Grateful Dead, Widespread Panic and the Allman Brothers are pretty elite company for a band with a mere four years of performing.

The fact Save His Soul even came into being may be something of a miracle. Twelve days into the recording of the album, lead singer/harmonica virtuoso John Popper collided his motorcycle with a car at about 70 m.p.h. The accident delayed recording for a month and put Popper temporarily in the wheelchair he still operates. At a recent Boston performance, Popper had to be wheeled onto the stage and propped up on a stool upon which he went about his harmonious business.

A Blues Traveler song, structurally at least, can be a bit predictable — a beautifully written harmony (sometimes aggressive, sometimes soulful) accompanying Popper's sometimes irritating but nonetheless sweet and soulful voice. The concoction then builds towards a precise and astounding harmonica solo which once again establishes Popper as probably the best harpist around and clearly displays the benefits of a Julliard schooling.

This formula was repeated time and again on the first two albums but explores new territory on Save His Soul. "Love of my Life" even shows Popper yielding to a guitar solo. The experiment is only successful in-part.

When the Blues Traveler returns to its older strategy of the harmonica crescendo as the song's centerpiece is when the band cannot be equalled. "Conquer Me" is melodic and passionate, one of the handful of songs which actually benefits completely from Popper's vocals. "NY Prophesie" and "Love and Greed" exhibit the band's rawer edge and aggressive licks that are more reminiscent of the previous two albums.

The highlight of Save His Soul is two-fold. "Trina Magna" and "Manhattan Bridge" are a pair of crowning achievements which no other band can touch. "Trina Magna" is a simply perfect combination of acoustic and electric guitars, precise harmonica complement and raw passion. The juxtaposition of these elements capped with a full vocal chorus is striking.

"Manhattan Bridge" proves two things. One, when John Popper arranges a song to the best of his ability, it is a masterpiece. Two, said masterpiece is better off without Popper's vocals. The

Despite weak crowd, Comedy Night entertains

Spring Comedy Night
Fine Arts Center
April 20, 1993

"Thank God we didn't get the Mullins Center for this. We'd be really lonely," cried Kevin Newman about last night's poorly attended Spring Comedy Night. Out of about 2,000 available seats at the Fine Arts Center, only around 200 people came for an evening of laughs.

The night's first comedian was Billy Martin. Martin came out working the crowd — and he got the responses he wanted. At one point, Martin was talking about Boston and picked someone out of the crowd who had clapped.

"What part of Boston are you from?"

"Dorchester."

"Oh, that's a great neighborhood — I live in Revere now, but I'm looking to move to Chelsea."

Martin also pointed out a sign for Mount Tom he saw on his way from Boston — "all I can think is 'before he mounts you.'" After sharing that with the audience, Martin let us know that now nobody there can pass that sign without thinking that from now on.

From there Martin was on a roll sharing stories about his grandmother and her weird words. The story that got the most laughs took place when he was in his car with his grandmother and there was a skunk in the road.

Because Warren Hutcherson had not shown up yet due to transportation problems, headliner Jeff Altman took to the stage. Running around talking about college, sex and calculus, Altman was a real crowdpleaser.

Altman brought tears to the audience's eyes when he talked about his calculus class. He confessed that he didn't do any work until mid-terms and then got a tutor to help him cram — a too true story for most college students.

"And do you know what I got on that mid-term? an eight — no curve in the world could help a grade like that."

Altman then turned to losing his virginity. Questioning who has the most pressure on them when it comes to the first time, he pointed out that women just have to be there.

Altman was a real sport at the concert, because, even after running out of material, he kept entertaining the crowd while waiting for Hutcherson to arrive.

It was worth the wait for Hutcherson. After apologizing for being late, he took control of the whole show. His first target was the police.

Saying that he was stopped by state police coming here, Hutcherson asked why it takes them so long to actually give you the ticket.

"I tapped on the window and said, 'it's obvious that I was in a hurry.'"

He also wondered why the temporary insanity plea can't be used for other offences and excuses. He wondered why students couldn't call their professor and say they couldn't come to class that day because of insanity.

Hutcherson also talked about his father, who happens to be a member of the Nation of Islam.

"My dad would see the tiniest plot against the Black man. We'd be in the store and he'd say: 'Go coocoo for Coacoa Puffs, so if you eat a colored cereal you're crazy? How about that Brown Rice? They call it wild rice. And why do they put black olives in a can, but green olives are in a jar? The Man is telling you that your crazy, wild and should be locked up."

■ summer movies

Ivan Reitman is behind the camera and Sigourney Weaver (with hair) co-stars. Michael J. Fox plays a wily concierge at a posh New York hotel, who schemes to raise cash for his own dream hotel in For Love or Money. If it flops, Fox has another comedy up his sleeve: Life With Mikey. In it, Fox plays a former child star who runs a cheesy talent agency.

In Hocus Pocus, Bette Midler, Sarah Jessica Parker and Sister Act alumnus Kathy Najimy play 17th century witches who return from the dead to eat all the children in a '90s New England town. This is supposed to be funny? Whoopi Goldberg stars in Made In America as a mom who discovers the sperm donor father of her kid is . . . Ted Danson.

Oscar-winner Mercedes Ruhel leads Neil Simon's coming of age film, Lost In Yonkers with Richard Dreyfuss along for the ride. Wayne's World creator Mike Meyers returns to the big screen with So I Married an Axe Murderer, where he plays a guy who can't commit, finds the perfect woman and then thinks she might be a notorious serial killer.

Kathleen Turner and Dennis Quaid team up as husband and wife spies who try to juggle career and family in Undercover Blues. Jason Priestly shaves his sideburns for his role as a '50s teen on the verge of adulthood who travels to California with his buddies to meet Marilyn Monroe in Calendar Girl.

As for sequels, get ready for Charlie Sheen in Hot Shots! Part Deux, Blake Edwards' Son of Pink Panther, and Weekend at Bernies 2 (really).

Drama

Want something heavy in between the barbeques and the beach? Try out Tom Cruise as a lawyer (hmmm, sounds familiar) in the film version of John Grisham's powerhouse bestseller, The Firm, with Sydney Pollack (Tootsie) directing.

Also up is the eagerly awaiting follow-up to Boyz N the Hood, John Singleton's second feature, Poetic Justice. None other than Janet Jackson stars in this love story set in South Central Los Angeles.

Kathleen Turner gets serious in House of Cards, a family drama dealing with a young girl's autism, which also stars Tommy Lee Jones.

Sharon Stone tries for more basic instincts (acting wise, that is) in the high-rise sex thriller Sliver. This adaptation of Ira Levin's novel co-stars hunks William Baldwin and Tom Berenger.

Evil nanny Rebecca De Mornay turns lawyer in Guilty as Sin. This courtroom potboiler directed by, yikes, A Stranger Among Us' Sidney Lumet has Don Johnson mugging it up as a defendant who may or may not be a serial killer.

With the success of The Crying Game and Howards End, the art house circuit is flourishing. Coming up on the independent track this summer is British director Kenneth Branagh's (Dead Again) big-screen take on Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing. Branagh also stars, along with Emma Thompson, Denzel Washington, Michael Keaton and unfortunately, Keanu Reeves ("to be or not to be, dude") playing the robust characters in a classic tale of love and mistaken identity.

Also on tap is Vincent Ward's sweeping romantic drama Map of the Human Heart, with Patrick Bergin, Anne Parillaud and Jason Scott Lee. Rachel Ward and Michael York co-star in Wide Sargasso Sea, a NC-17 rated film about a madwoman in 1840s Jamaica. Sofie stars Karen-Lise Mynster in the two-decade spanning tale of a young woman in late 19th century Copenhagen.

Romance/relationships

If you're in the mood for love (c'mon, who isn't?), there are a handful of mainstream Hollywood confections aiming straight for your heart. Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan play a man and a woman who live at opposite ends of the coast and who have never met but try to fall in love anyway in Nora Ephron's Sleepless In Seattle.

Brad Pitt, Christian Slater and Patricia Arquette star in the comedy True Romance, which tells about a couple who flee Detroit with a suitcase of mob contraband, determined to start a new life.

Bridget Fonda and Eric Stoltz play a pair of twentysomethings lookin' for love in the low-budget ensemble piece, Bodies, Rest & Motion. Matthew Broderick, Kevin Anderson and Annabella Sciorra star as three singles who share a New York apartment but never seem to get to know each other in The Night We Never Met.

Lena Olin (Havana) plays a psychiatrist who falls for her manic-depressive patient (Richard Gere) in Mr. Jones. There's a different kind of love triangle in Three of Hearts as Kelly Lynch (Drugstore Cowboy) and William Baldwin both vie for the love of Twin Peaks' Sherilyn Fenn.

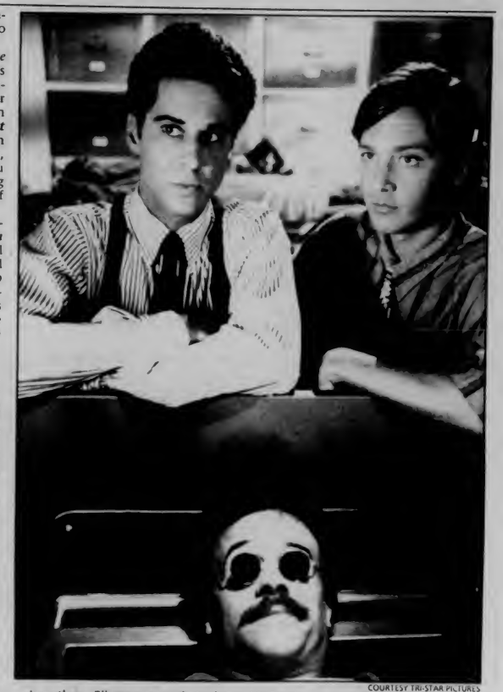
Kids

No summer could be complete without plenty of kid's fare. Disney is re-releasing the grandaddy of animated flicks, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, while Home Alone writer/director John Hughes concocts a big-screen treatment of Dennis the Menace with Walter Matthau as the cranky Mr. Wilson.



COURTESY TRI-STAR PICTURES

Jonathan Silverman and Andrew McCarthy reprise their roles as two hapless insurance company go-getters who still can't seem to rid themselves of their very dead boss, Bernie (Terry Kiser) in "Weekend At Bernies 2," coming this summer.

Macaulay Culkin, thank goodness, is not co-starring.

Also up is Super Mario Bros., a live-action version of the video game with Bob Hoskins as one of the brothers and Dennis Hopper as the villain. City Slickers' co-star Daniel Stern makes his directorial debut with Rookie of the Year. In this baseball fantasy, a 12-year-old little leaguer joins the majors when an accident leaves him with a magical pitching arm.

There aren't any big stars in Free Willy, except if you count the big whale that is the centerpiece of this Flipper-esque tale of a boy and well, his whale.

Phew. The jury's still out on whether any of the films are actually good, but that never stopped Hollywood before. With something for everyone, the summer of '93 may just prove the hottest yet.

Mike Meyers stars as a bachelor afraid of commitment who thinks he's met the perfect woman in Harriet (Nancy Travis), until he suspects her to be a serial killer in the comedy "So I Married An Axe Murderer," coming this summer.

your car yourself, Arnold says, for about $5 you can buy a Chilton Manual, "which will tell you how to fix everything," he says. The Chilton Manuals are available at auto parts stores.

Arnold warns both women and men to be wary of all estimates because myths about the car repair industry are basically true — "They will take advantage of anyone who doesn't have a clue," he says.

Body

"You should wash your car once a week," Arnold says. "You should wax it once a month. When you do wash your car, spray underneath it to get rid of the dirt."

It's especially important to clean your car if you live in a location where the weather is cold and salt or other products that can be harmful to a car's body can be accumulated from road travel.

He adds that it's a good idea to clean car windows with products like Windex, but if your car has tinted windows only use soap and water because "Windex will make the tint bubble. It breaks down the glue."

Arnold says that maintaining your car in accordance with your owner's manual and with the suggestions above will help prolong the life of your car.

He adds, "If you drive a car conservatively, it will last a lot longer. The more miles you put on it, the harder you drive it, the more you're going to wear it down."

March draws 200 to take back the night

By STACY MALONE
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — "Women united, take back the night" echoed through the streets last night as approximately 200 women participated in the "Take Back Our Rights, Fight for Our Lives" rally and march.

After a rally at the Unitarian Universalist Church, the crowd moved in a candlelight procession to Smith College and rallied again. The event was sponsored by the Everywoman's Center and other UMass women's organizations, Mount Holyoke College and Smith College.

Mary Pfister, a staff member of Womanshelter/Companeras in Holyoke, told the crowd domestic violence has become a true epidemic that is "killing all of us."

"Look around at your sisters," Pfister said. "Three out of four of you will be a victim of some form of violence in your lifetime and one in every eight women will be raped in their lifetime."

Pfister said one out of every 15 women will get a sexually transmitted disease from their rapists and one out of 15 rapes end in pregnancies.

"Women are victims of abusive people," Pfister said. "There is a system out there that is trying to make us victims and keep us victims.

"In this affluent country we have women living in poverty. Women don't want to live in poverty and women don't want to live off welfare," Pfister said. "Welfare sucks. You don't make any money off welfare."

Pfister said women want to work and be able to support themselves. She said that women have a lot of power in this country, but they need to realize they have power and learn how to use it.

Tricia Burrows, a sophomore at Smith College and a co-chair of Rape Awareness, said rape and the emotional turmoil that follows rape are unexplainable.

"How do people expect rape survivors to explain what happened when we had no control over the rape. I am tired of women being the victim, and I am tired of being a victim," Burrows said.

"Sex is suppose to be a beautiful thing, but rape is a violent act — not sex," Burrows said. "Most of all, rape is hell."

Karen Harrison, a member of Women's Alliance Against Pornography, said pornography is the lowest blow to women and there is definitely a correlation between violence against women and pornography.

"Pornography gives men ideas. It teaches them how to rape and abuse women," Harrison said. "Pornography says women can't be pregnant, women can be raped, women must be thin and men have

Stockbridge plan sparked UMass' first growth spurt

By PATRICK BROWNE
Special to the Collegian

Editor's note: This is the second in a four-part series about the University's 130th anniversary.

The "Pioneer Class" of the Massachusetts Agricultural College entered in the fall of 1867. Their daily routine and student life by today's standards, are unthinkable.

Every student lived in Old South College and was woken up for breakfast and mandatory prayers at 6 a.m. Having been founded during the Civil War, the college had an extremely militaristic environment. Students marched as a group from class to class, saluted the four professors and attended military drill instruction every day.

In the afternoons, students were required to work in the college fields, which are now the athletic fields, the residential areas and the engineering quad, putting in at least three hours of labor a week.

However, no matter how disciplined the routine was, college students were still college students. Rowdiness always broke out and increased in frequency and severity as the years went by.

President William Clark had a great deal of difficulty in keeping the infant college open, as the college received no funding from the state. Looking down from his house atop Orchard Hill, which is now marked by a memorial near Butterfield. It was more than apparent to him that the college would soon be too cramped.

Clark organized the construction of

Soccer donation falls short; program to stay

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

Before the 1992 season, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team was resurrected by alumnus Jeffrey Ryan, president of the World Class Soccer Camp, who pledged to donate over a half a million dollars over five years so the University wouldn't have to cut the program.

Now, after a successful season in which the Minutemen fell one penalty kick short from their first trip to the NCAAs, University officials have announced Ryan has only been able to come up with $2,500 of the original $780,000 he promised.

Refusing to say how much he planned to donate or whether the amount would cover the costs of the program, Ryan said he still plans to work with the University and continue backing the team.

"The only thing I am going to say is that we are going to continue to contribute to the soccer program at the University," said Ryan. "The terms of the agreement are between the University and myself."

Associate Athletic Director Aloysius N. Rufe said despite the difference between what Ryan has given and what he originally promised, the men's soccer program is secure.

"It's in place and permanent," said Rufe.

According to Rufe, Chancellor Richard O'Brien had shifted funds from the University's general budget into the athletic department to cover the costs of the soccer team.

UMass head coach Sam Koch said his job is to keep his team focused on what it is doing this spring in preparing for the upcoming fall season. Koch said he is grateful for all that Ryan has done for the team.

Rainy Earth Day called success

SETH KAYE / COLLEGIAN

People attending yesterday's Earth Day celebration in the Student Union Ballroom could chose their favorite pro-environment slogans, like the ones displayed on these bumperstickers.

By FRANCIS ZERA
Collegian Staff

Rain hampered UMass Earth Day festivities for the second year in a row yesterday, forcing organizers to move the celebration indoors to the Student Union Ballroom — not that it deterred participants from having some good, clean fun.

Earthday Coalition Coordinator Robin Purnell called the events of the day "a big success," judging on the basis of the number of people they were able to draw in and educate on environmental issues.

Purnell said that she received "a lot of support and positive feedback" from attendees.

Purnell estimated over 1,000 people attended, and added that approximately $700 was raised, and is to be divided between the Hitchcock Center for the Environment and the Arcadia Wildlife Sanctuary.

Education was the major concern of most participating organizations. MassPIRG had the most pronounced presence, with several tables distributing information concerning over-packaging, promotion of the use of public transportation and a letter-writing campaign for the Endangered Species Act. The U.S. Congress will decide on whether or not to re-authorize the ESA this year.

Earth Day lecture a raucous debate

By JESSICA TAVERNA
Collegian Staff

Hopes of a "shiny, happy" Earth Day were crushed yesterday as well as hopes of regaining peace and order at "The Earthday Affair — The Exciting Environmental Talk Show" held in the Student Union Ballroom.

Two different topics were covered amid raucous debate and loud verbal confrontations: the first on the Endangered Species Act and the second on the disposal of low-level nuclear waste.

Curtice Griffin, a professor of forestry and wildlife biology and Thomas Stevens, a professor of resource economics discussed the problems that Congress will need to address when considering re-authorizing the Federal Endangered Species Act.

Griffin spoke of the "listing process," and how it fails to protect the groups that fall under the genre of "candidate species," the "recovery process," and a lack of money needed to put it into action. He added that there should be more emphasis put on the habitats which need to be preserved in order to ensure the longevity of the very species we aim to protect.

Stevens spoke of the economic benefits and drawbacks of the Endangered Species Act. He offered his observations on "values" that sell in the marketplace when it comes to endangered species, such as recreational value, altruism, the value of "option" and mere "existence."

After a short recess, Dale MacLeud, from the Citizen's Awareness Network, and Gerald Peterson, a nuclear physicist and professor of physics and astronomy, began discussing issues surrounding the disposal of low-level nuclear waste. The discussion deteriorated into a heated debate crossing several topics.

MacLeud addressed the long-term health effects of low-level waste, and said there should be greater focus on "waste reduction" and less on "waste management" and the manner in which crucial information concerning nuclear waste and its effects are witheld from the public. "Anytime anyone in the nuclear industry comes forward and says, 'Hey, there's a problem here,' they get fired, blacklisted, or discredited."

Gerald Peterson confronted the idea that anything with the word "nuclear" in it is bad, and stressed the necessity of nuclear power in our everyday lives. He urged the audience to view the issue as a question of "benefit versus risk."

Symposium covers variety of bilingual issues

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

The second part of the Symposium on Puerto Rican Migration and Education was held yesterday in the Campus Center.

The first part was held at the University of Puerto Rico in November. The conference is sponsored by El Consejo de Educacion Superior de Puerto Rico (UPR), the Cultural Diversity and Curriculum Reform Project at UMass and the Mauricio Gastòn Institute at UMass/Boston in collaboration with the Latin American Studies Program and AHORA.

Yesterday's symposium began with opening remarks from education professor Sonia Nieto, the conference co-director, Provost Glen Gordon and Bailey Jackson, the dean of the School of Education.

The inaugural address was delivered by UMass education professor Luis Fuentes. The topic was "Educating Puerto Ricans in the U.S.: The Struggle for Equity."

Panel workshops were held all day and covered a variety of topics. Discussions mainly focused on the education of bilingual students.

Jalil Mendoza, president of AHORA, a Spanish-speaking student organization, said the educational system at UMass has very few benefits for students from Puerto Rico for whom English is their second language.

AHORA sponsored a Puerto Rican buffet held at the Top of the Campus restaurant for lunch. The buffet included spicy, roasted chicken, rice with pigeon peas, roast pork and sweet plantains.

Mendoza said the organization hoped to create an awareness of Puerto Rican and Latin American culture.

"There needs to be permanent research to see what we can do for bilingual students," Mendoza said.

Next year's conference will include the Dominican Republic, Central America and Experts discuss Balkan conflict

Panelists decry Western inaction, warn of precedent

By BRIAN C. O'NEILL

Three panelists compared the fate of Bosnian-Muslims and to that of the millions of victims of the Holocaust during World War II. They called for the people to help end the war of aggression against the Bosnian-Muslims not only for the moral implications, but because of the precedent inaction could set.

Panelists Philip J. Cohen, M.D., who has given up his career at the National Cancer Institute to devote his attention to the Bosnian War; University Professor Dr. Erwin Staub, a Holocaust survivor; and Foreign Fellow at Mount Holyoke College Alma Musanovic, who came over from Sarajavo last November, spoke at the last part of the teach-in, "Bosnia Under Siege." The discussion was to remember the 50th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising.

"The Holocaust Museum has just opened this week in Washington, to commemorate the victims, but we are ignoring the simulation in 1991,1992 and 1993," Cohen said.

Staub spoke about the history of the region prior to the war and the financial troubles leading up to the war. Since the break up of Yugoslavia, the Yugoslavian army has been used by the Serbians to push the Bosnian-Muslims out of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

According to Cohen, two-thirds of the Serbian Nationalists in Bosnia are from either Serbia or Montenegro.

"Eighty-five percent of the victims of this war are civilians . . . women, elderly, and children," Cohen said.

The United States has strategic military interests in the region, Cohen said. The area of the Balkans is very important to Russia from the economic standpoint, because it has warm water ports, something that Russia needs badly, Cohen said.

"Russia has a historic search for ports . . . I see the future and it is not good, the precedent we are setting in Bosnia is a bad one, we need to do something," Cohen said.

The biggest problem is apathy, the speakers said. They all said the inaction in America on the part of activists, is, in a way, action because it says they don't care.

Cohen noted various texts from Serbian culture, having many current Nazi ideas about ethnic cleansing and having a homogeneous state.

"One of the texts was called The Outline, published in 1844, it is a blueprint for Greater Serbia, it describes how lands currently owned by Bulgaria, Hungary, Croatia and Bosnians all would be incorporated into one Serbian state," Cohen said.

Cohen, correcting Staub's allegations that the Croatians recently took Ustasa's flag, a Croatian fascist

Holocaust service scheduled for today

By MIMI FELLNER
Collegian Staff

Symbolic speeches from students and faculty and the lighting of memorial candles, remembering the six million Jews and other peoples that perished in the Holocaust, will be the focus of the Holocaust commemoration service scheduled for today at 12:15 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge.

"Our focus is on educating, commemorating, and creating a conscience on campus," said Hillel Assistant Director Yehudit Heller.

Heller stressed the importance of today's event, and Holocaust Memorial Week in general, saying, "The lessons of the Holocaust are not taught regularly so we feel obligated to get some of these lessons out there through a variety of events like arts and drama, debates, panel discussions or personal stories of Holocaust survivors."

But today's service is exceptionally important she said because, "It's a way to bring the campus together."

Organizers said the campus-wide service is meant to teach people what led to the Holocaust and why it must never be allowed to happen again.

Following the service at 1:15 p.m. there will be a moment of silence throughout campus during which the Old Chapel bells will ring for a full minute. Organizers hope students across campus will take this minute to remember the Holocaust and the lessons to be learned from it.

"There is no way to compare pain but there are thousands of ways to express it," Heller said.

Social worker: Why do men abuse women?

By NICOLE BURKE
Collegian Correspondent

In 1985, one woman died at the hands of her batterer every 22 days, today the rate is one every eight days, said a spokesperson from Necessities/Necesidades, a women's center in Northampton.

"We are seeing the horrifying fact that the number of women killed by their batterers is on the increase," said Gail Kielson, a Necessities/Necesidades staff member. The lecture, "The Feminist Perspective of Battering" was held Wednesday night in the Student Union Gallery as part of the "Mother Issues/Womyn Issues" series.

"Our society is an increasingly violent society," Kielson said. "Abuse happens in context of intimate relationships, but also happens because of our values in society."

Kielson said that our society sees violence as "commonplace" and she believes our country understands battery to be normal. According to the American Medical Association, Kielson said that one out of every two women will be in a violent relationship.

"In any relationship there's conflict," she said, "but in an abusive relationship the abuser will always find some reason to continue abusing no matter what the woman does to prevent it."

Abuse occurs in a cycle with three phases, Kielson said. There is the Honeymoon Phase, where the relationship begins, the Tension Building Phase,

Haigis Hoopla to grace court this weekend

Start dribbling those basketballs and get ready to shoot some three pointers. The third annual Haigis Hoopla Basketball Tournament hits the courts today.

Haigis Hoopla is a 3-on-3 tournament and festival that will take place April 23-25 at Haigis Mall in front of the UMass Fine Arts Center.

According to Dan Margulis, a member of the event's public relations staff, this year is the biggest yet, with 210 registered participants.

"We had so many people sign-up," Margulis said, "that this year we had to cut off entries."

Sources said past and present UMass basketball players are expected to participate. Margulis hopes to have Anton Brown and Kennard Robinson play in the tournament, but only seniors and past players are allowed to enter.

"We're also hoping that Coach Cal will make an appearance," Margulis said.

Organizers will begin the fun with a pre-tournament party on Friday night. The party, which was supposed to be in the Curry Hicks Cage, has been moved to Boyden Gym. According to sources, the party is open to anyone

Caribbean history said pivotal

Prof. attributes world modernization to the islands

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Staff

Because it is looked upon today as a mystical paradise, many people fail to recognize the significant role that the Caribbean has played in the modernization of the world, said a noted anthropology professor Wednesday night.

Sidney W. Mintz, professor of anthropology at Johns Hopkins University, delivered the concluding lecture of a series of five on the 500 Years of Constructing the Caribbean, in Memorial Hall.

According to Mintz, the discovery of the Indies by Columbus made these tiny islands become of great significance to what would soon be the New World.

"The Caribbean islands are where Columbus celebrated new land," Mintz said, "and the terms East and West took on an entirely new meaning."

Among the areas of modernizing the Caribbean, the slave trade became the pillar of support for the islands, and due to the forced industrialization because of the sugar plantations, the Indies became known as the Sugar Islands, Mintz said.

The Haitian Revolution symbolically freed Haiti, which was the only island to challenge Spanish power, and served as a perfect example of modernization techniques, according to Mintz.

"Caribbean societies developed in parallel ways, which more than ever made them the first modernized people in world history," Mintz said. "Slavery, gender roles and oppression were all among areas of concern which made up their culture."

Mintz asked the audience what other region of such a small population and poor living conditions has ever contributed to the world society in a bigger way. Mintz pointed to examples like this to show the massive impact the islands have had on the Western development.

"The messages that the islands send us of palm trees, rum and coke, the sun and the ocean, are not all there is to the Caribbean," Mintz said. "As far as I'm concerned, the islands do not represent the Third World's Third World."

According to Mintz, the vision that some people have of the Caribbean as a state of mind is wrong. The people who make up the Caribbean, whose poverty we mistake as a sign of underdevelopment, are not given enough credit for their influence on countries such as the United States.

Amy Schaffa, a sophomore human services major, said although Mintz's terminology was a little hard to understand, she agreed that there are strengths of the Caribbean that people are not aware of.

UMass anthropology professor Oriol Pi-Sunyer said the turnout of the audience consisted mostly of undergraduates, faculty and graduate students.

The series of lectures was sponsored by a faculty committee representing the Five College Area, Latin American Studies and Modern European Studies at the University.

with a $2 fee for non-participants. Registrants will have the opportunity to participate in a 3-point shooting contest and a slam dunk contest. Organizers said there will be food and other games and competitions.

The actual tournament begins this Saturday at 9 a.m. and continues through Sunday. Included in the festival is food, fun and entertainment for the whole family, organizers said. According to Margulis, UMass basketball players will be there to sign autographs. In case of bad weather the tournament will be moved indoors to Boyden Gym, Margulis said.

Margulis said the tournament is double elimination, so each team has at least two chances to play.

"We have lots of prizes to give out to winners and participants," said Tommy Pace, another staff member.

According to Pace, prizes include hats, T-shirts, movie passes, ski-lift tickets, memberships to the former Athletic Clubs of America, and a complimentary entry into the Gus Maker Basketball Tournament.

Organizers said the cost of registration is $12 per person for each team that registers. According to Margulis, the proceeds go to the UMass Scholarship Fund. Organizers are in the process of trying to change the fund to be applied to a sport management major, Margulis said.

Vandals paint temple, graves

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

PEABODY — A rabbi's plan to educate people about anti-Semitism by leaving graffiti on the wall of his temple for a few days was thwarted Thursday when someone painted over the swastikas and slurs during morning services.

The efforts to cover the graffiti at Temple Ner Tamid was discovered the same day the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum was dedicated in Washington.

The graffiti was found Wednesday morning. The same day, police in Everett discovered vandals had desecrated a Jewish cemetery. More than 100 tomb stones were toppled and others were spray-painted with swastikas. Everett officials also reported Thursday that anti-Semitic spray painting had occurred at a hospital in the city.

Peabody Police Capt. Jerry Bellew said the only similarity between the two incidents was the swastikas.

Everett Police Sgt. Patrick Iacono said the investigation has uncovered several suspects "of the younger generation." Not all of the suspects are from Everett, Iacono said.

Everett police were working with the FBI and state law enforcement officials.

Rabbi Abraham Morhaim had told reporters Wednesday he planned to leave the graffiti on Temple Ner Tamid for a few days and it was still there when he arrived for morning services Thursday.

But by 9 a.m., someone had applied a coat of paint over the swastikas and slurs. However, they were still visible.

Morhaim said the effort to cover up the graffiti could have been done by the perpetrators or by people horrified by the reminders of Nazi extermination of six million Jews.

"I can tell you it's not kids," Morhaim said. "On one of the panels was 'Jude,' the German word for Jew. Kids would not be conversant with this Nazi terminology."

Morhaim said he was gratified by the calls from non-Jews expressing their sorrow and outrage.

"Most of the people are good people out there. There are a few crazies out there," Morhaim said.

Cardinal Bernard Law, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston, condemned the anti-Semitic acts.

"The Holocaust began with individual acts of violence. We must be vigilant in our communities to stand in solidarity against any and all acts of violence and hatred, be they against a Jew, Christian, Muslim or members of any racial minority," Law said.

Hungry media clamps its jaws on a tiny Waco tidbit

We watched the place burn to nothing on every channel.

Boom.

We read all about the Branch Davidian compound, complete with color diagrams of the observation tower, the cult's sleeping arrangements and a full explanation of the M5 gas disperser mounted on federal CEV assault tanks.

We haven't been so well informed about the latest assault technology since the Gulf War.

The "Pyro-nightmare," the "Apocalyptic End" and the "Fiery Conclusion" have been on the front pages all week. We know exactly when the fire started, how many were killed and the long puzzling history of the Branch Davidian cult.

The press was disappointed with the outcome of the Rodney King trial. They had spent loads of money and time preparing to capture the apocalyptic end of Los Angeles at the hands of crazed gun-wielding rioters. They quietly packed their cameras into their vans when nothing newsworthy exploded for them and began searching for something to fill the news gap.

Boom.

It was too sensational to be true! An immense, terrifying finale to the standoff stalemate, caught before the camera's eye! Everything the media wanted to happen in L.A., but less complicated! No grey areas, it's so easy here!

So we witnessed the climax of the 51-day drama, all done in time to be edited for the nightly news.

Interview Koresh's mother and neighbors! Paste together a recap piece, documenting the standoff from the exciting beginning! Koresh's $2.5 million contract for a book and film rights is null and void! Sell the rights! Sell compound souvenirs! "Waco" brand lighter fluid! Sell everything!

Gary
DEANE

O.K., O.K., first things first. Get Koppel on the TV! Get him an interview with that new girl, Reno! Grill her, Ted, get to the bottom of this! Expose the scandal! Probe deeply! Look serious! It's an hour-long special, now fix your tie!

"Attorney General Reno, it is my understanding that the compound has yet to be examined for remains of the cult members. Tell me, why hasn't this been done yet?"

"First of all, there may be undetonated munitions and explosives in the compound area, and second, Mr. Koppel, it's just too damn hot right now. It will be done first thing in the morning."

"So you have no gory skulls to show us, no secret underground bunkers, no strange religious ritualistic artifacts we can analyze?"

"We are in no hurry to further endanger the lives of the federal agents working the case by hastily examining the site."

"Well it is my understanding that you gave orders that overstepped those of President Clinton. I've had reports that President Clinton gave you an embarrassing verbal lashing. You must feel that you've set a dangerous precedent in breaking the chain of command and do you feel every member of the government can walk all over the president like that?"

"I take full responsibility for my decisions and gave the president full details of my plans each step of the way. He gave me full power to make my own orders and backed me every step of the way. Expecting the president to be an expert on siege mentality is ludicrous. The president is busy dealing with far greater concerns such as Bosnia, the jobs bill, a national health care plan, the Soviet Republics, feeding Socks the. . ."

Hold the presses! I heard Koresh is still alive in New Jersey, buying real estate with his new lover, Amy Fisher! Get the crews out there! Ted, sign off for crying out loud! This is important, now fix your tie!

Boom.

Just what's on my mind

You get two for the price of one this week, folks. That's right, this space is devoted to spreading itself thin for the benefit of yourselves. The first issue involves something very personal, and the other involves a mass tragedy.

There are people who say the friends you make in college are the ones you keep for a lifetime. I sure hope not.

Michael
MORRISSEY

In the course of college life, beginning with freshman orientation and ending with commencement, you probably meet 5,000 people. You may be acquaintances with up to 100 and have maybe even hung out with that many. Then there are your friends. Maybe you think you have 25, maybe 40. After all, you make more friends as you near graduation. Good friends, right? The ones who'll back you in a fight?

No. Most of your "friends" are the "see ya, wouldn't wanna be ya" kind. You know who they are, they're the ones who say, "Hey, it's okay if I take your ex-girlfriend out tonight, right?" They are the suckers.

In high school, everyone has had a friend who left one day out of the blue, never to talk to you again. Everyone has lost a friend over something stupid like a girlfriend. And everyone has had a friend who has played them out.

It's no different in college, except that people pretend to be more mature and they have refined the art of back-stabbing. Some weekend, if you want to know your real friends, pick a fight with someone twice your size and see how many of them stay with you and how many run like cowards. I'll tell you right now, the number won't be 40.

The Branch Davidian conflict has finally ended, and there is a large outcry about how the FBI mishandled the whole standoff. Many of those concerned worry about the 24 children, some of whom were allegedly abused. As far as I'm concerned, the fire basically served as a mass death penalty for the lawless cult.

When the government takes pains to control the behavior of individual citizens, the ACLU never fails to go ballistic. From protecting the unborn to restructuring welfare, the public shrieks in opposition to government interference with their private affairs.

But what about Waco? The government is supposed to regulate the behavior of a religious organization, but also bend over backwards to make sure nobody is killed. Sorry, folks, you can't have it both ways.

The Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms branch of the FBI spent 50 days and 50 nights trying to negotiate with madman David Koresh, even after he ordered followers to shoot down ATF personnel who had warrants.

The truth is the group did not really care whether they died or not. Cult members who left the compound before its destruction indicated a strong desire to return. Ted Koppel asked a woman on Nightline whether she wished she was in the compound when it exploded, and she said, "I don't know."

The only mistake that Janet Reno made was not sending the forces in sooner. They should not have allowed the ordeal to drag on for seven days, never mind seven weeks. With the amount of military expertise and firepower available in this country, surely a plan could have been drawn up to spare all women and children but get Koresh and his crew.

By waiting as long as they did, the FBI increased the death toll. Either way, we don't have to hear about David Koresh anymore. Good riddance.

Michael Morrissey is a Collegian columnist.

Civilians are in charge

"The necessary and wise subordination of the military to the civil power must be sustained." — Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Many members of the military are constantly complaining about Clinton and his lack of "service." These people did not complain about Reagan and his lack of "service" because Reagan both doubled the military budget and didn't offend the powers that be by making any changes.

Neil
CARPENTER

However, what those who are carping in the military don't seem to understand is what Gen. Eisenhower said so well — the military is run for and by the civilian government, not the other way around.

Military values are meant to be subordinate to civilian goals and values. We have a military to protect those values because we hold them so dear. To allow or ask those who must fight for American values to violate them would be the worst form of hypocrisy this country could engage in.

Ironically, it's the soldiers who pay the largest price when the way we govern our military runs apart from American values. Witness Vietnam, a clear case of when American idealist ends were fought for with immoral means. The severe consequences affected more than America's image in the world. America also felt poorly about itself and the reason was not just the napalming of kids, it was that we lost.

Instead of blaming ourselves, many people at the time blamed the members of the military because the public was holding the military up to an ideal that was and is unmatched by reality.

The military is composed of real people, who can be overwhelmed like the rest of us. If we build them up too high, their hard landing is our fault.

Granted, the military cannot be run like the rest of the federal government because the military has special needs and we in turn need a special kind of loyalty in return. Yet, the bottom line is that they are employees of we the people, and we the people just elected Bill Clinton as CEO.

Bill Clinton was elected because the electorate desired change above all else, and there was no concept he mentioned more than change. So it is no great surprise when the president brought change to both the economic and social realms of his administration. The military is like any other institution and its inherent nature is to be resistant to change — and that's not new.

Maybe the president doesn't like the military culture but he doesn't have to. Bill Clinton spent the last two years of his life talking to and meeting with thousands of Americans in an attempt to gain their good opinions and their votes. No one could go through this process of shaking hands and town meetings and not know what America stands for.

Housing must realize its vanity

On the afternoon of April 13 a Housing Services van, with three police cruisers, parked outside the Butterfield dormitory. A group of people exited the vehicles and entered the building in search of a person who, according to a person in a nearby dorm, was walking on the building's roof.

This search party was comprised of at least three police officers and the Housing Services' administrator. The search party's motives are suspicious when its actions are seen in the light of Butterfield's history and heritage.

The administrator reportedly pushed his way into a student's room, telling him to shut up and ask no questions. There was no search warrant, no suspicious behavior occurring in or around the room, and the administrator was not granted admittance by the resident, since the resident was asleep. Did the administrator use his intimidating rank to simply gain a more convenient view of the situation?

While the search party was on the roof, it seized advantage of an opportunity to confiscate the decades-old flag/emblem of Butterfield: a "Jolly Roger" pirate flag.

But the search party didn't stop here. These people seemed to have been waiting a long time for an excuse to enter the dorm and hassle its occupants. This is seen by the fact that instead of actually catching whoever was on the roof, the search party immersed itself in games of "tag" — so to speak — which were games of trying to twist any action or word of a Butterfield resident into an arrestable offense.

This business about the Jolly Roger symbol happened last semester, and I am sickened to find the deranged bureaucracy of the University of Massachusetts playing "catch the will o'the wisp" a second time. No one can catch a will o'the wisp, so why doesn't Housing realize its vanity?

Senseless beatings go on daily

I followed Doris Cruz's agonizing ordeal when she was campaigning for the Amherst Select Board (Collegian, April 20). It appeared almost daily in the Union News. At the same time, I was experiencing racism and prejudice here at the University for the first time in my 37 years.

I had just arrived from Puerto Rico to pursue a second master's degree. I had won an award that translated into money for this university. I brought some of my own money and received financial aid through loans. In general, I am contributing to this university and state (without counting the money spent by my family when they visit the state). Racists do not see this; their ignorance blinds them.

When I engaged in the "silent struggle" encountered by so many minorities, I almost decided to take my business somewhere else, some place where my money and efforts would be appreciated. The director of the program I belong to and some friends had to spend some of their energy undoing the mess those racists did. It was a painful experience. I thank all those who helped me through that process.

It was also a learning experience to go through what Puerto Ricans, some born and raised here in the United States, go through "to just simply live." I have the advantage of having a job, home and a life on the island. Now, I have a challenge: to contribute to make Puerto Rico a place where people like Doris Cruz can share their talents with the dignity they are entitled to and deserve. My struggle is to make the island a place that attracts such human resources.

Racists prefer to get caught up in their ignorance. They do not want to see the dimensions of their actions. Just watch the Scola news being transmitted from different countries. If you do not have the advantage of knowing other languages, get someone to translate. The L.A. trial circled the globe. The media behaves almost the same way everywhere. The harm that was inflicted on Mr. King and is being inflicted daily on million of minorities is also inflicted on the prestige and the economy of this nation.

My heart goes out to those serious, human Americans who are striving to improve their country. Racism does not have to part of the culture of any nation, or does it?

Oliver Stone's remarkable Platoon is a modern day classic

By MARTIN BROWN
Collegian Staff

Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth . . ."
— Ecclesiastes

This warning begins the haunting Vietnam war movie Platoon. It sets the tone for the complete loss of innocence that Chris (Charlie Sheen) experiences during his tour in hell.

Chris enlists in the military because his father and grandfather enlisted in World War I and II. He wants to stop being a "fake" person and he thinks maybe he can find himself in Vietnam.

He arrives looking clean, healthy and professional. Within a week he is run down from lack of sleep, exhaustion, ants, fatigue and lack of attention. Nobody wants to talk to him because he is "fresh meat." They say it is better to die right after you get there, because at least you don't have too much pain.

During Chris's first reconnaissance mission, we meet the two leaders of the platoon. It is not the officer, but two of the sergeants who run the show. The higher ranking one is Staff Sergeant Barnes (Tom Berenger), who believes in doing what it takes to win the war, whatever the cost. The other is Sergeant Elias (Willem Dafoe), who is serving his third term and realizes that the US is going to lose this war. These two battle for Chris's soul.

Platoon — Video Pick of the Week

All three actors, Sheen, Dafoe and Berenger do some of their best work. Before they started filming, the platoon was put through a rigorous training maneuver to learn how to fight and survive, and it shows. All three look strung out from exhaustion, especially Dafoe. He is simply unforgettable as the caring moral sergeant who can't get the system to go with him.

The movie also examines periphery aspects of the war — why the poor are the only ones fighting for America, what it takes to survive in a war, why racial tensions and the drug problem were so prevalent, and how something like the My Lai massacre (a whole village murdered by U.S. soldiers) could have happened.

The movie was written and directed by Oliver Stone. He does a brilliant job taking a vast subject and bringing it together to make a concise memorable vision of life as a "grunt." The main character and narrator of the story Chris is loosely based on his experiences of being in the infantry during the Vietnam War.

In a surprise move by the Academy, Platoon won four Oscars, garnering statuettes for Best Picture, Best Director, Best Sound and Best Editing. This is a true accomplishment for Stone, because the subject is such a sore spot in America's consciousness. The Academy has been notorious for overlooking "hot" issues like this (remember Do the Right Thing).

War is hell. After the victory in Desert Storm, that statement may seem far-fetched. If you think so, you need only take one look at Platoon. It is the closest example of what life was like for a soldier in Vietnam. It is an important movie that pulls no punches, but then that's what you expect from Oliver Stone. (1986. Rated R. 119 minutes)

Insider's view reveals Rave-new atmosphere

By CHRISTIAN PERRY
Generation XPress

Rave?

The $5 bill slipped easily from my fifth scale.

They always do.

The man with the backwards Bulls cap lolling on his skull snatched the bill from my split tongue and shoved it carelessly into the electronic vulva.

From behind, the egg-bearing (hair) Temple Queens shoved me, not a Bill, brutally.

To the cruel orgy I slunk.

Ceilings boasting plunging, colored lights like room-sized hawks grasping cheerful entrails beneath them sneered at my arrival.

Perhaps it was the army of strobes, though I think instead the leg-consuming floor steam screamed at my eyes and soul.

Ha! But I haven't a soul, nor a religion, nor a desire to seek either, so I danced.

(Unscrew your legs and set them aside, and you'd Floor Slither pathetically.)

I, yes I, Floor Slithered majestically.

Strange it was how my presence stirred no shock.

Tonight, I was told today, all here were of the Reptilian Clique.

Tell me it wasn't the phenomenon above that ever surged from the dozens of looming speakers that entranced me so.

Oh, but so deliciously pounding.

Still, I needed to leave the trance floor and find the bar, the black bar, everything was black here, and coil on a stool. I did.

"Bud bottle," I shouted.

You're . . ."

You serve standing and sitting Dead lively drinks, I thought.

I'd swallow you and get sinfully high on your hair.

". . . a snake."

"Python, really. Beer?"

So I sipped (licked at) my $7.50 Bud while Czarina Mane looked on, curious and aroused.

Her eyes were open. Dance patrons? A few. And those that were, were focused on one of the three: cleavage, Levi Lucifer Lay Lumps, or pretty, pretty lights above (they were rather beauteous — Chemlawn works hallucinogenic wonders on my prey meat).

As the Industrial Auditory Beating hammered on, my slit-eye stare snagged the set of hanging cages, those enticing abodes I thought decoration, being occupied.

Up to the prisons crawled (quite primitively so) two sunglassed, black-clad sex paramours.

Once in, the two romped violently in each rigid realm, grasping the bars around them as if they were surrounded by, well, snakes.

So when I ascended one of the lust fortresses, naturally I was seized by a Hellcat Harriet like a lasso subsequently swung around in a fury.

I wanted to watch (consume) the Rave Chics.

But I giggled with gay mind caterpillars while the crowd watched my head pelt the prison bars.

"Good Morning," was the vexing group chuckle of street kid losers above me.

Breakfast was Street Kid Loser Leg Flesh.

The night was worth this morning misery. The memory of the music's tumbling Lordliness remains (hallucinogenic nothing).

I am slave to the newfound Brain Anesthesia Brother-Sisterhood.

North College in 1869 to accommodate new, incoming classes. North College would continue as a dormitory and then a classroom building until 1955, standing between Machmer and South College.

The 1870s were extremely hard on Mass Aggie, and many statesmen in Boston demanded the college be closed. Despite severe difficulties, Clark managed to keep enrollment steady at about 100 male students.

A student's ultimate loyalty was to his graduating class. During the course of the day, classes went everywhere together, sharing the exact same schedule. Occasionally, on the way from lecture to lecture, two classes would meet head on. In a situation like this, the two classes would charge and whichever had the most left standing at the end won. This event, feared by professors, was called "rushing."

President Clark retired in 1879, having guided the college through a treacherous childhood. He left a legacy both here and in Japan, where he founded the Sapporo Agricultural College, now Hokkaido University (UMass's sister school). Clark was replaced by Charles Flint, the state's Secretary of Agriculture. Flint's presidency lasted only one year, and he rarely even saw the college, choosing instead to remain at his office in Boston.

In 1880, Levi Stockbridge became president. Stockbridge was the classic Yankee farmer, a practical man who taught his classes in the fields with a shovel in hand, never at the podium.

As president of the college, he had the same no-nonsense approach. Stockbridge initiated a building program which later presidents would complete. The first of these new buildings was a Drill Hall constructed in 1882, located near present-day Bartlett Hall.

Stockbridge retired in 1882, at which point Paul Chadbourne returned for a second presidency. However, his health was still poor, and he died in office in 1883.

Stockbridge's successor, James Greenough, worked to complete Stockbridge's building plan. In 1885, the Old Chapel was constructed and Old South College replaced by the larger New South College. In 1886 the West Experiment Station was constructed to house state of the art chemical laboratories. It was followed in 1889 by the East Experiment Station for botany experiments. These buildings are located next to Northeast Residential Area.

Old Mass Aggie had experienced its very first growth spurt. In 1886, during an era filled with optimism, Henry Hill Goodell became president, guiding the campus into the twentieth century and leaving it a radically changed place. The 1890s were a rebellious age, when incoming students wanted to break with the conservative traditions of the 1870s and 80s.

Many extreme changes took place, including the advent of elective classes and the arrival of the first female student in 1892. The student opinion was voiced for the first time in newspaper called Aggie Life, which became the Collegian in 1915.

In the last years of his administration, Goodell pushed a construction bill through the state legislature, creating a building boom which marked the birth of Mass Aggie. Munson Hall was constructed in 1898 for the vetrinary department, Draper Hall in 1902 as a dining commons, Wilder Hall in 1905 for horticulture, Clark Hall in 1907 for botany, French Hall in 1909 for floriculture, Fernald Hall in 1910 for entomology, Flint Hall in 1911 for dairy science and finally Stockbridge Hall in 1915 for agriculture.

North College shortly after its construction in 1869.

He was succeeded by Kenyon Butterfield, former president of Rhode Island Aggie, and the last of the agricultural presidents. When Butterfield took office in 1905, the building plan was well underway and Mass Aggie was experiencing its first population explosion, with enrollment surging to 600 students by 1915.

As Butterfield came into office, the tide of liberal arts in education was rolling in. The older agricultural professors were still the most influential, but the new liberal arts professors were best liked by the students. Beginning with George Mills, the first dean of the new division of humanities in 1905, a new type of instructor began to infiltrate Mass Aggie.

During the 1910s, students took English with Edward Lewis and Helena Goessman, the first female faculty member. Frank Rand instructed the students in drama, Charles Patterson in poetry, Anderson MacKimmie in French, Phillip Hasbrouck in physics and Curry Hicks in athletics.

Unwittingly, in attempting to compromise with the liberal arts, Butterfield had begun the transition to a broad-based University.

where the woman senses something wrong, and finally the Violence Phase, or the abusive incident.

"The abuser in a purposeful way will do things to isolate the woman from her support system," Kielson said. "He goes for her strength center vulnerabilities so over the course of time the woman doesn't have the energy to leave."

Kielson said that the longer a woman is in a relationship, the harder it is for her to leave. But, if the woman does leave, Kielson added, the abuser may try to persuade her to come back or he may try to threaten and abuse her again.

"Women don't get themselves into abusive relationships," Kielson said. "It happens and it's hard to get out."

Kielson said she believes that emotional abuse generally starts before physical abuse. But if physical abuse happens early on in the relationship, then it will most likely be a violent relationship and the hitting will keep happening.

"The fact is that there is such a disparity," Kielson said, "the attitude that is inherent in our society about who we are as women and who men are as men are not equal at all."

Asked by an audience member as to why men batter, Kielson responded that authorities do not usually ask this question but instead focus on questions aimed at the woman.

"Authorities often ask the woman why she didn't leave or why she stayed or went back with her abuser," Kielson said. "The question, 'why do men batter?' is rarely asked."

Previously a high school social worker, Kielson said she has worked at the center for eight years. "All women have experienced harassment and victimization and it's hard to fight back," she said.

"There is a lot of support we can give each other," Kielson concluded. "In spite of it all, I see hope. I see more men addressing the issue. Women are inspiring, I have to believe that we as a society will change."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are able to discuss vital issues today and win a key person's approval. A message is exactly what you needed to hear. Buy sale items only if you can afford them.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Solid understandings will help shape the future. You are very much attuned to people who share your goals. Agreements are reached with those at a distance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Financial speculation is tempting but untimely. You can stop mistakes before they happen by consulting with your allies. With egos set aside, minds will meet. Put family priorities first.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A financial agreement can help solve a secret worry. Do not shun face-to-face meetings; getting together with potential allies works wonders. Rely on the facts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be more aware of your responsibilities on the home front. Greater participation is essential. A budget revision will be helpful only if it is practical.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Now is a banner time for you creative people, especially writers. Continue to polish your skills. A special talent can be one's most prized possession. The evening hours are best for romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You receive vital information from a mysterious source. By tonight, everything will be cleared up. Entertaining business clients at home is a smart move. Keep the guest list short and select.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Now is not the right moment to force anything to a conclusion. It could prove to be a long-lasting and beneficial arrangement. An in-depth investigation will provide the ammunition you need to make a pet project successful.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may turn out your best work during early morning. Taking time off this afternoon is a fine idea, providing higher-ups approve. Accept a last-minute invitation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A business deal negotiated in haste could bring losses. Eccentric friends must be dealt with diplomatically. Be able to laugh at yourself if you make mistakes. Then start afresh.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Not a good day for making investment changes. A too-good-to-be-true offer should arouse suspicion. Cheer up a loved one by planning a special treat for an older person.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Collaborative ventures are favored. Avoid giving snappy answers today lest you alienate potential allies.

Women's tennis closes season with potential

By JEFF CROFTS
Collegian Staff

Despite finishing out its season with consecutive losses to New England rivals Providence College and the University of Connecticut, the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team showed a great deal of potential in its first season since a budget cut-induced one-year hiatus.

UMass finished out the year at 3-3, the record head coach Judy Dixon said she had predicted for the season's end.

"In the beginning of the year I looked at our schedule and I thought that we would finish at 3-3," Dixon said. "Near the end I thought we even had a shot at 4-2, but we didn't make it."

The Minutewomen did not make it to 4-2 because of this week's losses to Providence and UConn. The losses notwithstanding, Dixon said that her team has shown promise.

"I think our future looks very positive," Dixon said. "I think that we are one or two players short at the top from being an excellent Division 1 program."

Against Providence on Tuesday, the Minutewomen fell 8-1. The lone bright spot was No. 1 singles and freshman phenom Liesl Sitton who polished off Kristen Brooks 6-2, 6-1.

Down at Storrs, Conn. Wednesday, the Minutewomen had their chances but were unable to come away with a victory against the experienced laden Huskies. Dixon said she was not pleased with her team's 7-2 defeat.

"I am a bit disappointed in (UMass') performances in certain instances," Dixon said. "We need to have more confidence coming in and we have got to play more aggressively."

Sitton suffered her first and only defeat of the year when she fell to UConn's No. 1, wily veteran Ellen Barrett. Barrett, who won the New England Championship in the fall, made few mistakes and came out on top 6-4, 7-5.

The two winning points for UMass came in singles competition. Minutewomen Stacey Scheckner beat UConn's No. 4 Maude Bing, 6-3, 6-3. The other winner for UMass was No. 6 Kelly Grim. Grim, a senior, made her swan song a winning tune as she blasted UConn's Kristen Priola 6-1, 6-3.

In doubles competition UMass was swept away by UConn 3-0. Sitton and her partner at No. 1 doubles, Lesley Watts, fell in a close match to Ellen Barrett and Chur Sharnia, 6-4, 7-5. At No. 2 doubles UMass' Scheckner and Pam Levine fell in straight sets.

UMass' No. 3 doubles team, Alyssa Cohen and Kelly Grim, were down a set but rallying when Grim injured her ankle chasing down a ball, forcing a UMass forfeit.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST

Around the big leagues: Burks, Sparky & Jose

BEHIND HOME PLATE by Luke Erickson

No, kids, that was not a misprint. Jose Canseco really did pitch an inning in an exhibition game against triple-A-affiliate Oklahoma City last week, striking out one and getting two flyouts.

Congratulations, Sparky Anderson, on victory number 2,000. Now, if you only owned the Tigers, and keep at it another 25 years, you might catch Connie Mack.

A home run in his first at-bat against the Red Sox — you think Ellis Burks was trying to say something?

The Cleveland Indians are hitting over .320 as a team — jeez, AL East opponents better hope their bats cool down once their pitching comes around.

San Francisco fans shower the field with souvenir baseballs from the new left field bleachers. Now fans in Chicago can breathe easier, knowing that stupidity has hit California, too.

Wow, just imagine: if mediocre teams like Montreal can score in double-digits out in Colorado — what would Detroit do?

Memo to Butch: Hey, Double-D has three of the four Boston losses — maybe it's time to move Bankhead into the rotation. Just a thought.

Not to jinx the guy, but Milwaukee's Darryl Hamilton could break the ML record for most error-less chances that has stood for 20 years, a record set by Curt Flood.

Can Steve Howe be any more ineffective?

UMass alumnus Gary DiSarcina is doing just fine for the Angels, hitting .263 without an error in the field.

Hey, didn't you used to be Kevin McReynolds?

After losing last Saturday, the A's fell under .500 for the first time since Sept. 29, 1987. Can you say the end of an era, boys and girls?

Would you believe Johnny Oates ordered an intentional walk to Omar Vizquel? Thus endeth a streak of 1,747 plate appearances without one.

How much is good pitching worth? The Braves' 2.16 ERA can sure help cover up a .203 average. When you hit that bad, you should be thankful to break even.

How bad is Cincinnati's season-opening slump? So bad that a message from team mascot Schottzie 02 read, "It's DOGgone time we start winning. No bones about it." That's okay, you can vomit now.

Yes, for those of you who were wondering, the Red Sox sweep at Kansas City was the first ever since the Royals came into the American League in 1969.

What is it about San Diego that makes crybabies like Derek Bell, hitting .308 since being traded, so damn happy?

Hmmm, Tim Wakefield, Pittsburgh's knuckleball sensation last year, is 1-2 with a 5.85 ERA. Is it the lousy offense to support him or the lousy defense behind him?

Trivia Answer: Lee Mazzilli, who had pinch hit for Darryl Strawberry, was on deck when Mookie Wilson's groundball trickled through Bill Buckner's legs in Game Six of the 1986 World Series.

Crucial A-10 weekend as men host Bonnies

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

When you peruse the University of Massachusetts baseball team's schedule, and stare at this weekend's series with Saint Bonaventure University, the word "crucial" immediately pops into your head.

The three-game series is crucial because the Minutemen (8-15, 3-8 in the Atlantic 10 Conference) are mired in seventh place in the A-10, right below the Bonnies (13-14, 4-6). It is crucial because there are only three A-10 weekends left. Crucial because time is running out, and this is the team's best chance to rebound.

"This weekend is very important, because they're right in the pack with us," said UMass head coach Mike Stone. "Well, yah [the series is crucial], we have to start winning. We have to take it one game at a time, but we have to go with the idea [of a sweep]."

Saint Bonaventure is not unlike the Minutemen. They have a high team batting average (.293, with Mike Bennett leading the team at .389), and a higher earned run average (4.90). Luckily, the Bonnies average over seven runs per game.

Brian Titus (4-3) is one of the top starters on St. Bonnies, as he averages over seven innings per appearance. Titus has a 2.77 ERA, and has struck out 41 while walking only 35.

The main focus of the Bonnies is hitting. Bennett is also leading the team with 5 HR, and after that they have Mike Simmons, who checks in with a .371 average, and a league-leading 18 doubles. John Phillips (.301) leads the A-10 in triples with 3.

The Minutemen must be more concerned with their pitching than the Bonnies' bats. Stone said he will go with freshman Jay Murphy, Jeff Toothaker and Jim Telgheder, presumably in that order. Murphy pitched well last weekend, picking up his first shutout of the season.

Hot bats include left fielder Justin Howard, who is second in the A-10 with a .422 average, 3 HR and a team-leading 25 RBI. Mark Pileski (.379) is out with strained thumb ligaments, but Joe Mattivello has filled in well at the plate with a .367 average. Senior Steve Corradi has a .360 average, 20 walks and seven stolen bases. The team has scored 38 runs in its last two games, but has allowed 17.

Gorillas to host Knights

UMass prepared for No. 15 Rutgers

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Some teams that win six games in a row might tend to get a little laid back and cocky, thinking they can defeat anyone.

But the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, despite their six-game win streak, knows they cannot have this attitude when they face off at 1 p.m. tomorrow on Richard F. Garber field against the 15th ranked team in the nation, Rutgers University.

"Rutgers (7-3) is a team that can really take it at you," said coach Ted Garber. "They're a solid team and are very potent offensively."

Potent indeed as the Scarlet Knights boast seven players who have scored in double figures. Ryan O'Shea is the Knights "big gun." He's compiled 35 goals, and 12 assists as well. Teammate C. Lamanna is not far behind O'Shea, with 40 points including 20 goals and 20 assists. Chris Prat will also be a force to deal with tomorrow — he has 13 goals and 15 assists. Between the pipes, goalie John Kidon has had a solid year, earning a 0.58 save percentage.

With this many players scoring in double figures, the Scarlet Knights are, no doubt, a run-and-gun team. If the Gorillas can play tough defense and make crisp passes, they could very well have a number of fast breaks.

Leading the way for UMass on the break will be All-American Mark Millon, who has a whopping 56 points on the season (37 goals and 19 assists), despite the fact that teams focus their defense on him. Wes Depp, who has scored nine goals in his last two games, has 26 goals on the season and seems to be benefitting from the focus on Millon.

Mike Valente (eight goals, nine assists) and Greg Kline (7 goals, 10 assists) will also be counted on for big games tomorrow. Of late, goalie Tom LoPresti has stepped up his game and will have to be a wall against the high-powered Rutgers offense.

Yesterday, while most teams took cover from the inclement weather, the Gorillas were out in the rain practicing, realizing the importance of preparing for Saturday's game.

"It's going to be a tough game tomorrow," said senior midfielder Bill Edell. "We have to be ready to play these guys because if we're not, it'll be a long day."

Lax Notes: Common UMass/Rutgers opponents: Rutgers beat St. John's 17-7, UMass beat St. John's 25-4. Rutgers beat Delaware 14-8, UMass beat them 12-8.

Tomorrow's game can be heard on 91.1 FM WMUA with the voice of Gorilla lacrosse, Mike Fagerson, doing the play-by-play.

Braud finishes men's gym year placing 16th

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts men's gymnast Jason Braud ended his season last weekend, as he finished 16th on the floor exercise in the 51st Annual NCAA Men's Gymnastics Championship.

Braud, a junior, scored a 9.550, just .125 short of qualifying for the finals. With the difficulty of Braud's routine prepared for the final round, had he made it, Johnson felt, he could have won the national championship on the floor.

"If (Jason) qualified for the finals, he had one of the hardest routines that would have made it. This (routine) would have made it easy to win the event," said Johnson.

Braud, who was competing in his first national championship of his collegiate career, said that his routine was good, but a bit sloppy.

"I'm happy, yet not ecstatic," said Braud. "All this is going to do is make me work harder. If I got into the finals, I would have had the highest starting score going into (the final round). Making the finals was the tough part."

Now, Braud is looking ahead to the 1993-1994 season, where he will work hard to improve on his routines. Braud, who qualified for the Eastern Regional Meet in both the floor exercise and the vault, has expectations of heading to the NCAA championship in both events.

"Next season, I'm going to work so hard," said Braud. "Now I have a taste of what (the national meet) is like. I want to go to Nebraska (where the 1994 national championship will be held) to compete in both the floor exercise and the vault."

Johnson has loftier expectations for the stand-out gymnast.

"With some good spring training and good work over the summer and fall, I think he could qualify for the Regional meet in all four events that he competes in (floor, vault, still rings, and parallel bars) and possibly two or three of those in the NCAA championships next year."

Men's gym notes: UMass head coach Roy Johnson was presented with a service award at the National Association for College Gymnastics Coaches banquet. Johnson received this honor in recognition for the work he has done for the award over the past few years. Johnson received a plaque shortly after presenting the Senior Athlete of the Year award, called the Nissan Award. Johnson also was elected the president of the NACGC for a two-year term.

The '93 NHL playoffs commence; can the Bruins make a comeback?

CROSSCHECKS By Matt Vautour

Upsets, octopi, and overtime . . . It's playoff time in the NHL and some interesting series have emerged in round one.

Smythe Division

Vancouver versus Winnipeg: Canucks 2-0. Two words: Kirk McLean. He dominated game one as Vancouver came away victorious 4-2 and matched the performance in game two, leading the Canucks to a 3-2 victory. If he continues his inspired performance, the Canucks may make a run a the Campbell Conference title.

This series features the NHL's two most explosive wingers in Pavel Bure and rookie phenom Teemu Selanne. Unfortunately for the Jets though, after Selanne, they are an inexperienced, relatively weak team. The series moves to Winnipeg where the Jets will try to avoid a sweep.

Calgary versus Los Angeles: Series tied at 1-1. This may be the last time the playoffs come to Wayne's World, and Gretzky wants it to be memorable. In Calgary on Sunday, the King offense exploded for six goals to upset Calgary. The loss served as a wake-up call for the Flames, who stormed back in game two with a scoring frenzy en route to a 9-4 victory. The series now heads to Los Angeles for games three and four.

Norris Division

Chicago versus St. Louis: St. Louis 2-0. St. Louis shocked the NHL by beating the top-rated Blackhawks in game one. A fluke, said many hockey experts. Well, the Blues proved that they were for real by shutting out the vaunted Blackhawks 2-0 in game two.

This series was supposed to highlight Chicago goalie Ed Belfour. Instead, the spotlight has shifted to Blues netminder Curtis Joseph, who turned back 47 shots in game two. The Blackhawks are in for quite a battle if they're going to rebound from two games down.

Detroit versus Toronto: Detroit 2-0. The octopuses (octopi?) are flying in the motor city. The tradition of flinging the tentacled sea creatures on to the ice when the Red Wings win continues.

This was supposed to be the marquee series in the first round, but so far it has been all Red Wings. Aided by two short-handed goals, Detroit overwhelmed Maple Leaf goalie Felix Potvin for a 6-3 victory in game one.

Game two was more of the same as the high-powered Wings, led by two goals and an assist from Steve Yzerman, powered its way to a 6-2 victory. The series continues north of the border tonight.

Adams Division

Boston versus Buffalo: Shocking upset. Buffalo 2-0. The Buffalo Sabres acquired Grant Fuhr for one very important reason, to beat the Bruins in the playoffs, and so far it has been a successful plan. Game one was a heartbreaker for Boston fans as former Bruin Bob Sweeney beat them in OT.

Hockey doesn't get much sloppier than what the Bruins played in game two. Andy Moog played like he needed a trip to Pearle Vision. The Bruins once-dominant defense did not come to play. Unless the B's refocus, it's going to be an early exit.

Montreal versus Quebec: Quebec 2-0. It's hard to believe that it was only a year ago that Quebec finished behind the Hartford Whalers and out of the playoffs while Eric Lindros held out. Thanks to the Lindros trade, the Nordiques are in the playoffs with home ice advantage, while Lindros stays at home. Happy golfing, Eric!

The Canadiens recent tailspin continues into the playoffs and the young Nordiques are taking advantage of it.

Patrick Division

Pittsburgh versus New Jersey: Pittsburgh 2-0. There are two events in hockey history that my dad loves to talk about: Bobby Orr's immortal game winner in the 1970 Stanley Cup, and the Herb Brooks-coached U.S. Olympic team upsetting the Russians. Unless Mario Lemieux gets seriously injured, these Herb Brooks-coached Devils aren't going to be advancing, because it would take more than a miracle to stop the Penguins.

The Penguins are riding an 18-game undefeated streak into the playoffs. It could be 22 very quickly.

Washington versus New York Islanders: Series tied at 1-1. Dale Hunter was the story in game one, scoring two goals in the third period to help the Caps earn a 3-1 victory. Washington's defense did an exceptional job limiting Islander scoring machine Pierre Turgeon to only one shot.

Game two of this series was the most exciting game so far. Whenever the Islanders make the playoffs, overtime seems to be commonplace. With the score tied 4-4, sudden death came to the Capital Centre. It took two extra periods before Brian Mullen became the hero, beating Rick Tabbaracci to give the Islanders a 5-4 victory.

Ironically, if the NHL had changed their playoff format this year to the plan to be implemented next year, the same teams would have made the playoffs. Ah, progress . . .

UMass recalls Holocaust

Service provides opportunity to reflect on oppression

Students, faculty and community leaders of different backgrounds came together to remember not only the six million Jews who perished during World War II, but also the many other cultures that have been oppressed throughout the century at a Holocaust Commemoration Service Friday afternoon in the Cape Cod Lounge.

"Each person has a connection to the Holocaust," UMass student Rachel Simon said in an introduction. "We are here to remember and acknowledge discrimination and oppression."

The speakers at the service, many of whom are children of Holocaust survivors, read poems and talked about their family's experiences.

Tom Bailes, a UMass graduate student and son of two Holocaust survivors, said even after 50 years, his parents are still in hiding from the Nazis. He said their experience has manifested itself in him.

"They told me the world is a scary place and I should hide my Judaism, which I did until recently," Bailes said, calling himself a member of a "generation that was never supposed to be."

Student Activities Advisor Delphine Quarles compared the discrimination she endured growing up as an African-American to the discrimination Jews have faced.

"Ignorance and intolerance is our greatest oppressor. Unless we are all free, no one is free," Quarles said.

Student Trustee elect Al Lizana discussed a recent study which reported that 20 percent of Americans believe the Holocaust was a hoax fabricated by the Jews in order to gain status and sympathy by the rest of the world.

"In 50 years people may believe the Holocaust and slavery never happened," he said. "We can't afford to forget because history can and will repeat itself."

Educators seek to alter school minority policy

By FRANCIS ZERA
Collegian Staff

There is a need to change elementary and secondary school policy and attitudes concerning the education of Puerto Rican students as well as for all minorities, according to members of a symposium held at UMass last Thursday and Friday.

The Symposium on Puerto Rican Migration and Education was held to confront the need to understand the socio-political and educational obstacles facing Puerto Rican students, according to organizers.

The first part of the symposium was held at the University of Puerto Rico in November 1992.

The symposium was sponsored by the Consejo de Education Superior de Puerto Rico, the Cultural Diversity and Curriculum Reform Project at UMass and the Mauricio Gaston Institute at UMass/Boston in collaboration with the Latin American Studies Program and AHORA, a UMass Spanish-speaking organization.

Puerto Rican students are not being fairly represented on American school boards, according to Betty Medina Lichtenstein, the only Puerto Rican member of the Holyoke School Committee, and the first minority elected to a school board in the state.

"Puerto Rican students coming to the mainland have a very difficult time due to language barriers and differing school structures," Lichtenstein said.

She added that she saw a "discrepancy" in attitudes toward and treatment of Puerto Rican students in the high school and the vocational school in Holyoke.

Lichtenstein said she believed this discrepancy was chiefly due to the differing attitudes of the administrators toward Puerto Rican students in their respective schools. She pointed to the high school principal's stricter disciplinary policies which had a discouraging effect on minority students, as opposed to the vocational principal's more encouraging attitude.

The main difficulties Puerto Rican parents face when dealing with American school systems are the different roles schools and teachers play in the two societies, said associate professor Sonia Nieto of the UMass School of Education.

Nieto said in Puerto Rico, "schools are exten-

UM student dies in crash

By BRIAN GORMLEY

A University of Massachusetts student died in a one-car accident on Swamp Road in Whately Saturday afternoon, according to state police.

Police said Maria Iakovidou, 22, was a junior transfer student originally from Veria, Greece. She transferred to UMass last year from Thessaloniki, Greece.

COURTESY DIMOS SILVESTRIADES
Maria Iakovidou

State police Sergeant John Healy said the accident occurred when the car lost control and collided with a utility pole shortly after 2 p.m.

The car crashed as it was heading southbound and lost control, smashing into the pole. The crash caused the car and the pole to catch fire, Healy said.

Healy said the cause of the accident is still under investigation.

According to the Springfield Union News, Kirk Brogg of Swamp Road witnessed the accident.

"It was going around the curve on two wheels," he said. "It was completely out of control."

Firefighters were not able to get at the car for 20 to 30 minutes because of live wires that fell from the pole on to the car, said Whately Fire Lt. Alan Sanderson. Sanderson said it took the firfighters that long to cut the power out of the wires.

There will be a memorial service tonight at 7 p.m. at the Holy Trinity Greek Orthodox Church in Holyoke. Anyone wishing directions to the service can call 546-3727.

Benefit held for library

Coach Cal recognized for donations

By MIKE CARVALHO
Collegian Staff

John Calipari, whose coaching skills have propelled the University of Massachusetts basketball team into the national spotlight, was recognized last Thursday for working to bring the same recognition to the UMass library.

The men's basketball coach was named Outstanding Library Benefactor for 1993 at a reception in Memorial Hall which was attended by 100 faculty, students and fans.

Calipari was recognized for using his influence to draw attention to the importance of the library, and for donating upwards of $10,000 to the library, a combination of fees from speaking engagements and personal monetary donations.

Provost Glen Gordon, who presented the award to Calipari, called Calipari "the library's best spokesman," stressing the coach's commitment to the University as a whole.

"When interviewers want to talk about athletics, he wants to talk academics," Gordon said.

Calipari pledged to continue working on behalf of the library to show his appreciation for the support he receives from the UMass community.

Comparing the library's current situation to that of the men's basketball program in the '80s, Calipari reminded those assembled that the Minutemen had been at the bottom of the rankings when he took the reins in 1988.

While the team finished the 1992-93 season ranked 14th in the Associated Press

Lecture — Jan D. Dizard, co-author of The Minimal Family, will speak at the third annual Consumer Lecture at 7:00 p.m. in Skinner Hall, room 18. She will address "The Family in Transition: Changing Family Values or a Reflection of Social Change?" The lecture is free and open to the public. For more information, call 545-2391.

Fraternity pulls chariot for charity

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Members of the Delta Upsilon Fraternity pulled a chariot from Boston to Amherst last weekend in a fund-raising event that netted approximately $7,000 for the Jimmy Fund, a foundation that sponsors research for children with cancer.

Delta Upsilon Brothers began pulling the chariot along the 110-mile route Friday morning from the Dana Farber Cancer Institute in Boston, and finished Saturday afternoon when the chariot arrived at the Chapter House on 778 North Pleasant St.

Along the route, two brothers at a time pulled the chariot while a van followed behind. Each person would run from five to 10 miles before being relieved by someone in the van.

"We each ran a few shifts, and you run until you drop," said Delta Upsilon member Nick Dicaprio. "When you get tired you yell for help, then you catch your breath in the van and hop right back out."

Philanthropy Chair Scott Stover said money for the event was raised by sponsorships from local businesses, raffle ticket money and donations made by residents of the cities and towns the chariot passed through.

Stover said the chariot pull was originally a "keg roll" from Boston to Amherst, but was changed to a chariot pull seven years ago at the insistence of the Jimmy Fund.

Member Larry Ross said residents of the towns along the route were very willing to donate money for the cause.

"The response we got was unbelievable," he said. "People were so happy to help out. It was tough pulling that chariot 110 miles to Amherst, but it makes you realize how valuable life is."

sions of the community and the home," and "teachers are seen as 'second parents'" to the students. She added there is greater parental involvement with education in Puerto Rico, and that once in the United States, "the reality is quite different."

"Too often there are low expectations of [Puerto Rican] students because they don't fit into the traditional mold," Nieto said.

She described five points schools need to address in order to better serve the Puerto Rican student body. Tracking of students through the educational process, the reasons for "retention," or 'keeping back' students from advancing to the next grade also needs to be addressed.

She said the "feeling that foreign languages are not worthwhile" needs to be changed, and "parents, teachers and students all need to be involved in education."

Nieto also sees a need to "change the way we teach" as well as "what we teach."

Nieto concurred with Maddie Marquez from the President's Office of Mount Holyoke College, who said the "educational bureaucracy does not move quickly."

Nieto added that the educational system needs "to be pushed along" towards the implementation of these changes.

The Conference also offered workshops on Bilingual Education and Puerto Rican Students, Higher Education: Recruitment and Retention, Collaboration Research between Puerto Rico and the United States, Critical Pedagogy and Language Acquisition for Puerto Rican Students.

Casino Night a success

Students rake in cash for cancer research

By DANIEL BOUCHER
Collegian Staff

The wheel of fortune, and sometimes misfortune, spun for gamblers at the fourth annual Casino night last Thursday.

At press time, the number of people who attended and revenues raised were unavailable. All profits raised by the charity event, which was sponsored by the Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors, will be forwarded to the National Brain Tumor Society.

The night went smoothly and everyone seemed to have a good time, although the winners, of course, might have had a little more fun than the losers.

Jeffrey Gottlieb, a UMass student, had a good night. Gottlieb won $54 at blackjack.

"I love Casino night," Gottlieb said. "It should be every single night, and then my tuition would be free. Casino Night is the night for me."

Gottlieb ended the interview quickly, saying he felt like he had to leave before he pushed his luck too far.

Angel Zucker, who said she lost $2 between the wheel of fortune and roulette, but won $3 at craps, praised the idea of Casino night because "it's something different to do."

Joe Emerson said he lost $20, but did not mind because "it's for a good cause." He said he does not gamble much, but went because one of his friends won $80 at last year's Casino night.

Sean Linane, a representative from the Brain Tumor society, addressed the crowd during the night and thanked everyone who attended. Most people seemed to be more interested in gambling than in listening to him, but he received an enthusiastic cheer from those who did listen.

Linane is also a former member of the Board of Governors. He helped produce the Board's first Casino night under Jeff Glassman, and was chief producer in the second. Linane said a friend of both he and Glassman died of a brain tumor, which is why the Board started the night for the benefit of the Brain Tumor society.

Ellen Story, the state representative from the Amherst-Pelham district, also visited Casino night for a few minutes. She said she did not bet any money, but did say she had paid the $5 door fee, even though she had to leave for another appointment.

Haigis Hoopla creates action-filled weekend

By VANESSA ADELMAN
Collegian Staff

The sound of dribbling basketballs and cheering crowds filled the beautiful spring weekend at the third annual Haigis Hoopla Basketball Festival.

The festival began Friday with a pre-tournament party in Boyden Gym, continued all day Saturday and ended on Sunday with the championship games.

Organizers broke up the 210 teams into four divisions based on ability — the divisions, from best to worst, were Top Gun, Hot Stuff, Weekend Warriors and Couch Potatoes. These were then divided into age categories of master's, High School, junior for 13-years-old and under and a category for those between 18 and 30 years old.

Most of the crowd had their eyes on the Top Gun championship. UMass Minuteman basketball players Kennard Robinson, Anton Brown, Assistant Coach Jimmy "Bruiser" Flint and Fitzhugh Tarry were the best of the best as "Bruise's Boys."

JESSICA TAVERNA / COLLEGIAN
Players compete during this weekend's Haigis Hoopla Basketball Festival.

Bruise's Boys beat out Tracy's II in a hard-fought 21-19 game.

The other favored team, Freak Show, with UMass players Harper Williams, Francois Firmin, Tony Barbee and his brother Chris, lost Sunday morning. All teams played full throttle, with players even falling into the Fine Arts fountain when going after the ball.

Organizers said they were encouraged that 15 percent of this year's participants were women.

The teams had names which ranged from the Dyslexic Speedreaders to the Fab 4. At least some teams appeared to know that they were doomed from the outset, with suggestive names like the "New England Brickmasters: 'but at least we look good,'" "The Hackers," and "Under the Influence." Other interesting team names included "Four Hung Men" and "Family Jewels."

According to Jesse Wilde, a sport management professor, the event is organized by members of a 500-level sport management class. Wilde said he believes it is a great way to educate people with hands-on experience.

Organizers said this year was different than the past two, because the tournament expanded to a festival.

"We wanted to link together externally in the community and internally on campus," Ted Fay, executive director of the event and Ph.D. candidate of the sport management program, said.

"Next year we want to expand even more by having a co-ed division, and broaden our relationship with the Fine Arts Department, who was very helpful this year," Fay said.

Sources said this year they added venders, bands, a juggler and even a hot air balloon, to attract more students and more people in the community.

The event was sponsored by many local and national companies such as US Air, Spalding, Coca-Cola, Uptown Pizza, Rafters, The Pub and others. It was broadcast on the radio by 93.3 WHMP-FM.

According to Burke Magnus, a sport management graduate student, this year not only had a big draw of teams, which entries had to be cut off, and the community, but they also had a big turnout of volunteers.

Exhibit, lecture provide outlooks on child abuse

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

Kathleen Anderson said she was being "facetious" when she chose the title "All Mothers Hurt All Children" for a lecture in conjunction with her art exhibit, "Babies Making Mothers."

Anderson said it was meant as a joke and she doesn't really believe it, during a lecture on Thursday in the Student Union Gallery.

But lecture speaker Carolyn Golstein, a physician from University Health Services, said she agrees with the statement.

"In my opinion, child abuse is a whole spectrum of things," Goldstein said. "I think we all do it. We all overpower our children a little."

Anderson said she knows she says things that hurt her daughter sometimes.

"I do a good job most of the time," Anderson said. "But I've said more hurtful things to my child than to anyone I've had a relationship with. . . except maybe my mother."

Anderson is a 42-year-old Master of Fine Arts graduate student at the University.

"Babies Making Mothers," Anderson's Master of Fine Arts thesis show, was a chaotic display of toys, paintings and quilts depicting mothers and children. It was shown at the Student Union Gallery last week.

Goldstein read from a paper on child abuse during part of the lecture, which took place amid Anderson's art work.

"The abused child is isolated by the abuser," Goldstein said. "Often there is collusion within the family."

This kind of treatment is very frightening for children, who may become distrustful and withdrawn as a result, she said.

Goldstein said abuse may be avoided and mothering made easier if mothers are not afraid to ask for help.

"It's scary to admit you're having having a hard time," Anderson said.

Holocaust survivor speaks on past experiences

By ERICA MOSS
Collegian Correspondent

There is a need for Holocaust survivors to tell about their experiences to make up for the six million people who died, a Holocaust survivor said Thursday.

Hedy Rose, a former professor in the Five College system and currently adjunct faculty and director of Educational Studies at Wesleyan University, Rose lectured Thursday night at Hillel House.

SETH KAYE / COLLEGIAN
Hedy Rose

Rose gave a personal account of her experiences as a young child, growing up in Southern Amsterdam, Holland during World War II.

Rose compared herself to Anne Frank as she began her story "In Hiding in Amsterdam — Childhood Memories." She said they both underwent very similar experiences during the Holocaust.

Rose described Amsterdam during the early twentieth century where she grew up with her family. She said she first experienced hateful prejudice at the early age of six.

"I had not a clue as to what was going on," Rose said.

She said all she felt was an immense hatred exhibited towards her by a friend. Rose said this was only the beginning.

Rose said beginning school was something she looked enthusiastically towards as a time to learn and make new friends.

She said when she was targeted and branded as a "Jew" this enthusiasm was slowly demolished. All Jewish school children were forced to wear a jacket with a large felt yellow Jewish star that had large letters spelling out the word "Jew."

According to Rose, the yellow star was the Nazis' way of labeling off the Jews. She said this "gave license to supposedly law abiding citizens to poke fun at, throw stones and bully the Jews."

Rose said these incidents worked themselves into a long cycle of oppression. She said Jews were not allowed in the schools, parks, libraries or on public transportation.

She said they also had a strict curfew. Rose referred to this cycle as "upping the ante."

Rose said this cycle gives note to the "incredible minds of evil it took to somehow always graze the level of oppression."

She said Nazi soldiers and Gestapo officials would often pay visits to their home, eventually taking away her father. Rose said her mother was told that she was to be taken at a later time.

Rose said this left no time for her sister, her mother or herself to remain at home — they had to escape at once. She said her mother took the children and fled their home.

Rose said she could recall how she "feared the sounds of their footsteps on the cobble stone street as they echoed all around."

She said the family eventually reached the Western part of Amsterdam, where they lived with a host family who had apparently made previous arrangements with her mother.

Rose said they lived in very cramped quarters with this family in hiding. She said this left little room for confrontation, privacy or space.

She said one time the family was eating smoked eel and she had to eat the head of the eel, consequently getting the fish hook which was embedded in the head stuck in her tongue. Rose said she could not scream or carry on for fear of being heard by outsiders, regardless of the immense pain.

According to Rose, food was often scarce and desperation drove people to eating any pet or animal that was available. She said all food was shared between the six members of the household, even at times when there was only enough for three.

Rose said the Nazis managed to wipe out all existing family members on Rose's fathers side during a period of ethnic cleansing. She said her grandmother, who was in an old age home, was "tossed like a chicken on a truck to

If Fire Breaks Out in Your Home Tonight, Will You Get Out in Time?

There is a common misconception that smoke will awaken sleeping people if fire breaks out. However, the truth is the toxic smoke actually puts people into a deeper sleep, too often making it impossible for them to escape safely.

That's why smoke detectors are so important. The sound they make provides early warning of fire, giving you and your family extra time to get out alive. And that's what it's all about.

Test your smoke detectors today. Replace the batteries with new ones if needed, and test them regularly from now on. It could save your life.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers or cartoonists and do not necessarily reflect those of the Collegian unless otherwise noted.

History's lessons will not solve the problems in our future

History is fascinating, history is revealing, history is endlessly complex and subtle, beautiful and subtle. But unfortunately history is not instructive.

The received wisdom about the Holocaust is that if we do not remember it we are destined to see it repeated. That is why Auschwitz survivor and Nobel laureate Elie Wiesel sounded so saddened on Tuesday when he was asked what he thought about the results of a Roper Organization poll showing that 22 percent of adult Americans thought it possible that the Nazi's attempted extermination of the Jews never happened. "We have been working for years and years. I am shocked that 22 percent — oh my God," was Wiesel's broken response reported, in the New York Times Wednesday.

But sadly, even remembering history does not make one immune from its tragedies; already in the post-war period we have seen genocides in Cambodia and East Timor. In a sense, our hopes for the use of history are a way of tempering our despair at the tragedies of humanity. The hope that wisdom can be distilled from the horrors of the past is a fig leaf for the overwhelming feeling of senseless loss that naturally comes from a study of history. Our deep pity at the pain of the lost past is what vainly tries to make it currency in the present.

Jesse
ARMSTRONG

Again and again ideology overpowers history. Men like revisionist historian David Irving who claim the Holocaust never happened are not stupid, it is just that their prejudice is strong enough to overcome empirical evidence.

Of course we must teach and remember the Holocaust, not least to remember the possible extent of humanity's inhumanity but also to honor the memory of those who perished. But I think we fool ourselves if we think that memory of such a horrors can preclude its reoccurrence.

As historian A.J.P. Taylor said of Emperor Napoleon III: "He learned from the mistakes of the past how to make new ones." This is what we are in danger of doing every time we attempt to decide future actions using "lessons" of history. Of course we must know history to understand the present in, say, the Balkans, but as far as decisions go we must leap in the dark, with morality as our only guide.

In ex-Yugoslavia we can say how grimly fascinating it is that we seem to have reverted to a pre-1919 situation with the Balkans as the perpetual trouble spot. We can also maybe compare the differing views of Baroness Thatcher (out of power, but very influential) and President Clinton on Bosnian intervention to the famous conflict between Gladstone and Disraeli over what Britain, the superpower of that era, should do about Turkish atrocities against Bulgarian Christians in the 1870s. We can even fear that by some occultish twist of fate Serbian nationalism will, as in 1914, be the trigger for world war.

Nevertheless, essentially all the above parallels are but trivia; history has made this conflict, but it offers us nothing but shrieks of warning regarding any solution.

Hani will not be forgotten

April 10, 1993. News of the assassination of Chris Hani spreads across the world as shock and anger increases throughout South Africa, especially among black South Africans. As Hani got out of his car, Janus Waluz, a Polish immigrant walked into his driveway and at point blank range, fired four bullets into Chris Hani's body, leaving him bleeding and lifeless on the ground.

Waluz, of the right wing neo-Nazi Afrikaaner Resistance Movement (AWB), was arrested for executing a well- orchestrated plan of the AWB to assassinate the leadership of the liberation movement. Evidence of this is the "hit list" found in Waluz' possession. However, the implications of Chris Hani's assassination are more than a "mission accomplished" for the vast majority of South Africans.

Gabi
GUMBI

Hani was not only secretary general of the South African Communist Party but one of the most respected leaders in the African National Congress, as well as commander-in-chief of Umkhonto We Sizwe (the military wing of the ANC) and the most popular leader with youth. Recently, Hani was credited as one of the most acclaimed leaders in South Africa, second only to Nelson Mandela.

In light of his unwavering commitment and dedication to the people of South Africa, Hani's death is of great significance. Thousands of angered South Africans took to the streets in spontaneous demonstrations to protest his assassination and express the great sense of loss the country felt. South Africa experienced one of the most successful work stayaways, which cost the White minority regime an estimated $4 million.

At the age of 50, Hani's tragic and untimely death will have great impact, especially in the Black townships and rural areas. One is left wondering what effect this will have on present negotiations and the future of South Africa.

Like many other South Africans, Hani joined the ANC youth in 1957 and the military wing in 1962. In 1963, Hani left the country to undergo military training. In 1967, as commissar of the Lutheli regiment, Hani fought with the Zimbabwe Africa Peoples Union in their struggle against the minority white regime in Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe). By the age of 32, Hani became the youngest-ever member of the African National Congress in 1972.

That same year he was stationed in Lesotho to organize the ANC political infrastructure in South Africa. In 1981, he escaped one of many assassination attempts when the South African Defense Force illegally crossed the border to Lesotho and killed many innocent civilians. From 1987 to 1992 he held the number two position of chief of staff and deputy commander of Umkhonto We Sizwe in Lusaka, Zambia. Ironically, Hani returned to South Africa in 1991 to promote peaceful negotiations and transition of power, and was one of the chief advocates of nonviolent change.

Hani's assassination jeopardizes the negotiation process, and once again raises serious questions about the sincerity and legitimacy of the National Party on issues of peace, change and restructuring in South Africa. The resulting vacuum in South African leadership is also felt by the South African struggle. Like all our martyrs who gave their lives for the struggle against apartheid, Hani's death serves to strengthen our resolve and motivation to keep fighting until the South African people are truly liberated.

It is therefore imperative to ensure that Hani's death was not in vain, and that the struggle for liberation in South Africa is intensified. Certainly Hani's absence will be sorely felt, and he will be missed by the whole country.

To commemorate the life of a true hero of our people and his contribution to the struggle, a service and meeting will be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center Room 917.

Gabi Gumbi is president of the South African/Azanian Student Movement. This column was signed by the group's executive committee.

Lower standards, lower credibility

A few days ago, I learned that at the last Faculty Senate meeting a few changes in the academic standards at UMass were passed, effective fall 1993.

The first was a provision stating that students who fail a course may take it up to two more times to pass, with only the passing grade, not the F, appearing on the transcript and figured it into the G.P.A. Secondly, students will have until after midterm exams to drop a course with a "W."

To many students this may sound great. What these students fail to realize is by lowering academic standards, the Faculty Senate has also lowered the credibility of a diploma from UMass. I personally came to UMass to work hard to get a degree that would carry prestige, pride and credibility, not one representing lower academic standards.

The Faculty Senate will meet again April 29. I urge all administrators, professors, students and faculty senate members to withdraw their support and overturn these standards, to retain the high standing of a UMass degree.

Same call, 30 years later

"I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal.'"

Three decades ago, in the city of Washington, a minister stood before a collection of citizens who believed in justice and freedom for an oppressed minority of our population.

Hundreds of thousands gathered in our capital city to protest the glaring indifference of the government and the nation as a whole to the plight for freedom of this mass of men and women, who were treated as anything but equal. They were cast aside, thrown away, reviled, hated and spat upon for their simple desire to live a free and fair life as members of our American society.

Peter J.
ORVETTI

Three decades ago, these words were said by that minister, in that city, in the pursuit of freedom.

But there is still oppression, and there is still suppression, of a group much of our society would rather ignore. They fight back, but not with violence; that same minister once said:

"I say to myself, hate is too great a burden to bear. Somehow we must be able to stand up before our most bitter opponents and say: 'We shall match your capacity to inflict suffering by our capacity to endure suffering. We will meet your physical force with soul force. Do to us what you will and we still love you.

"'We cannot in all good conscience obey your unjust laws and abide by the unjust system, because noncooperation with evil is as much a moral obligation as is cooperation with good, and so throw us in the jail and we will still love you. Bomb our homes and threaten our children, and, as difficult as it is, we will still love you.

"'Send your hooded perpetrators of violence into our communities in the midnight hour and drag us out on some wayside road and leave us half-dead as you beat us, and we will still love you. Send your propaganda agents around the country and make it appear that we are not fit, culturally and otherwise, for integration, but we'll still love you.

"'But be assured that we'll wear you down by our capacity to suffer, and one day we will win our freedom. We will not only win freedom for ourselves, we will so appeal to your heart and conscience that we will win you in the process, and our victory will be a double victory.'"

Martin Luther King, Jr., was shot down 25 years ago this month because of his passionate belief in equality for all people, freedom for all people, and that no hard-won victory is so great as that which is won with non-violence in the face of overwhelming hatred and assault.

As Dr. King led the nation to Washington in 1963, he had a hope in mind — that the nation would look at their fellow Americans and see that these people in Washington, just like they, watching on their televisions in New York, Virginia, Ohio, California, Idaho and Mississippi, were exactly that — just like they.

Now it is our time to make the great realization that the oppressed minority is just like us. Now, 30 years later, again in our capital city, again a great mass of Americans will congregate to make their call for freedom, equality, and understanding, for their basic civil rights.

The 1993 March on Washington for Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Equal Rights and Liberation took place Sunday, April 25. A million demonstrators were expected to participate.

Spanish column is an opportunity

I thought of starting this letter with a cheap joke about Dina Gold's letter (Collegian, April 5) concerning a column written in another language in March. I've decided that isn't the purpose of this letter, though, and she has embarrassed herself, as well as this University, enough.

Dina, the purpose of a university is to expand your mind to new ideas. UMass' call is for diversity, and this column written in Spanish is an example of that, but there's more. This column was written in a section dedicated to diversity. Your article goes against everything we are here for — you propose to put up a wall and keep different ideas out and yourself trapped in.

"Did you know?" By the year 2000, more than 10 percent of the U.S. population will speak Spanish.

"Did you know?" In other places such as Africa and Europe, knowing more than one language is very common.

I have struggled through two years of Spanish. I am nowhere near fluent, and I know the frustrations of learning a language. But it gives you knowledge and awareness of other cultures; this column made me even more aware.

My point is not to attack you, but to wake you up. That column can "educate the ignorant," by saying there are different languages, right on our own campus. Use chances like this column to better yourself — ask someone who speaks Spanish what the heck it said. Maybe you'll meet someone new who's all right, you'll learn something new and you'll help tear down that wall.

poll, the UMass library is currently ranked 90th out of 106 libraries in the Association of Research Libraries.

"We've got to attack that problem just like we attacked the basketball problem," said Calipari, who then repeated his goal that the library be in the top 20 by the year 2000.

"That's an ambitious goal," Gordon said. "But Coach Cal knows about goals — and he knows about rankings. With John involved, nothing's impossible."

"We all want to have a world-class campus," Calipari said. "But you can't do that without a world-class library."

Professor Daniel Martin, chair of the Faculty Senate Library Committee which co-sponsored the event with Friends of the Library, said the event was held to recognize Calipari's contributions as well as to draw attention to the work being done by Friends of the Library.

"We wanted to honor the coach, and we also wanted to get more people involved in this respectable and honorable association of professors and alumni," Martin said.

Also attending the reception were state Sen. Stan Rosenberg and former Minutemen Anton Brown and Tommy Pace.

The event was held during National Research Library Week, April 18-24, in honor of which proclamations from Gov. Weld and both houses of the state legislature commending the library were on display.

holding camps."

According to Rose, posters were posted up for anyone to earn money by turning in Jews and many did. She said eventually the only survivors besides herself were her sister and one cousin.

She said she awoke one morning when she was eight to find her mother dead from a stroke.

Rose said she and her sister remained in the care of their host family and after the war was over they came to the United States to stay with their uncle.

She said they were extremely fortunate to survive. Rose also said although there were many who were willing to make money by turning in Jews, there were others who did not.

There were many who saved lives such as their host family who had no blood relation to them at all, Rose said.

Rose said three crucial years of her life were spent in constant fear of being captured. She said unannounced searches engraved a never-ending terror of being caught as an escaped Jew.

Rose said she is fortunate enough to live and tell her story. She said she tells her story with the hope that she can "make up for those six million who can not speak, plead, or bring themselves to bare witness because they are no longer in existence."

Rose said she wishes to educate, reach out and "give strength of conviction" to the fact that these things really happened. She said what is written in the history books are things that happened to real people.

She said the Holocaust is not made up or "Hollywood make believe" because "it is not something we'd choose to experience." She said she feels the prejudices, hatred and stereotypes need to stop and not be glazed over.

Rose said she was taking a trip when she spotted a billboard which said "though we are many we are one."

"This is what we all need to turn towards," Rose said.

Perlmutter of Hillel recited a mourner's prayer which was followed by a minute of silence throughout campus.

Father Joseph Quigley of the Newman Center said of all of the Holocaust events he has attended at the University, Friday's was the "most touching".

Quigley also said students must all stand up for decency and human rights and to be proud of who they are.

"I hope the one thing you get out of college is respect for yourself and where you come from," he said.

Two musical Giants set to invade Noho

By DARIENNE HOSLEY
Collegian Staff

They Might Be Giants accordionist John Linnell fondly remembers his one year at UMass, as part of the 1977-78 freshman class — playing piano at night in the Fine Arts department, living in Southwest, taking over Whitmore . . .

"There was one main protest, over housing and Southwest, where I lived," Linnell said. "There was rain coming in the top. It was like living in a ghetto."

"So some thousands of irate students marched into the administration building and took it over for a day. It was really fun — I spent the night."

When Linnell returns to the valley Tuesday, it won't be as an activist but as one half of They Might Be Giants, the eccentric pop group he formed with guitarist John Flansburgh 10 years ago.

The Johns are on a two-week mini-tour of the northeast, leading to a May 1 show at their Massachusetts alma mater, Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School, to benefit the Martin Luther King Action Project.

UMass didn't help Linnell's musical career; a brief stint playing tenor sax with the marching band left him bruised.

"It was kind of an unpleasant experience. Particularly because the marching was this kind of militaristic trap — the people they had hired to train [us] how to march were really into the humor of intimidating people," Linnell said.

Linnell found freedom with the accordion, describing it as his "perfect instrument," and Flansburgh as a bandmate. They are known for melodies and word games: "I met someone at the dog show/she was holding my left arm/but everyone was acting normal so I tried to look nonchalant."

Such lyrics lead many regard the band as silly — entertaining, but fluffy. Linnell said that hurts.

"We like being taken seriously, particularly personally. Often we get the feeling that we're considered a little bit foolish, and that isn't the way we think of ourselves," he said.

In fact, many of their songs are downright dark: "Every jumbled pile of person has a thinking part that wonders what the part that isn't thinking isn't thinking of/should you worry when the skullhead is in front of you or is it worse because it's always waiting where your eyes don't go?"

"It's generally more interesting to write sort of a black song. If it's just strictly beat, there's not much tension," Linnell said. "But we don't think of ourselves as depressing; we think about this as pop music."

They Might Be Giants will be performing with Brian Dewan at Pearl Street on Tuesday, April 27, at 8 p.m.

Spring Concert revealed

Hey, ho, Naughty By Nature headlines annual event

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

All those rumors you've heard. . . they're wrong! Well, most of them were wrong. The 1993 Spring Concert promises a diverse array of talent from "all major genres of music," according to UPC's Jennifer Jubinville.

First, let's dispel the rumors. The list of five bands announced on Friday does not include Primus, 10,000 Maniacs or Porno For Pyros, nor does it include Arrested Development, Black Crowes or Living Colour. Citing excuses from Mother's Day commitments to Lollapalooza, many bands declined UPC's invitation. Luckily, the result was an eclectic and balanced mix.

The lineup will, however, be highlighted by local/international favorites Dinosaur Jr. J Mascis' renowned band is currently touring in support of their latest album, Where Ya Been. Seeing that the closest the band has been to Amherst since the tour's beginning has been Boston, this is the first and maybe sole opportunity to Noho's own fossils anytime soon.

Also featured will be those "O.P.P." guys, Naughty By Nature. The hip-hop group fronted by leadman/sometimes actor Trech, are one of the most prominent and recognizable acts of their type. Every song seems to contain a catch phrase. "O.P.P." spurned clothing emblazoned with the song title. Being "down wit' O.P.P." became a way of life. With the next anthemic hit, "hey, ho" could be found resonating throughout the parties of America.

The Wailers (sans Bob Marley) still exist as the spirit of their late singer lives on. Producing some of the finest reggae around, all that's missing is the legendary Marley's dreadlocks.

Also featured will be renowned guitarist/vocalist Richie Havens and opening act/Five Alive champions Canine Bastards. Havens continues to produce tasteful music after a long and accomplished career. The Bastards, established on the local scene, were awarded the position of opener after beating out four other bands earlier this month in Five Alive.

"[We] hope people take advantage of the opportunity to see stuff they wouldn't usually see," Jubinville said.

The 1993 edition of the annual Mother's Day weekend event in front of the campus pond attempts to tackle a wider scope of music compared to the more "alternative" focii of the past.

In the past, the concert has featured such performers as Ziggy Marley, Phish and the Beastie Boys and usually proves itself to be UPC's grandest production.

Once again, that's Naughty By Nature, Dinosaur Jr., The Wailers, Richie Havens and the Canine Bastards. So lose your rumors, let the truth be known. Happy Spring!

BELOW IS A PROGRESS REPORT OF MULTICULTURAL ACTIVITIES. Reports, issued from the Chancellor's office, will be written each month. The intent of the reports, and the essays, by different faculty or staff members, is not only to follow agreements reached between the administration and ALANA students, but also to list the efforts of the community at large in working towards a truly multicultural campus.

Toward Achieving a Multicultural Campus
Joyce Avrech Berkman, Professor of History

I would like to tell you about an experience I had in March. I was the guest in the fourth of the series of Conversations with Women Authors held at a distinguished institution in New York. The series included five authors, Erica Jong, Caroline Heilbrun, Ellen Chesler, Andrea Dworkin, and me, all of us white and middle class. Our recently published biographies treat the lives of white women, e.g. Heilbrun's work on Gloria Steinem, Chesler's on Margaret Sanger and mine on Olive Schreiner. The sizeable audience was predominantly white and female. At the end of the evening, my host lamented the paucity of men present and of women of color in the audience. This comment came after her description over dinner with me of her course on feminist writers, almost all white. She is a bright, sensitive, and very well meaning teacher, but clearly her consciousness on multiculturalism still needs raising. I felt a rush of diverse emotions. I wanted to thank her for giving me the opportunity to speak about race issues in my remarks on Olive Schreiner. I wanted to empathize with her desire for a more mixed audiences and with the difficulties of attracting diverse audiences in the era of more separatist politics and intellectual frameworks.

I repressed all these emotions, muttered some appreciative words, asked about my modest honorarium, and said goodbye, returning to Amherst at 2AM the following morning, but pondering, now and then during my ride home, how best to facilitate my host's multicultural education, a question that has haunted me as an educator for years. I keep asking myself what is the educator's role in changing the values of her students? If one decides that we have a responsibility to carry forth the multicultural mission of this University, how do we reconcile our identity as missionaries with the progressive pedagogical traditions of open inquiry and student ownership of the nature and process of their self-development? Surely, lambasting my host or my students and colleagues will not further our mission; they may censor their words around me, but their thoughts and values will not alter words because I tell them I find them narrow or offensive. And if they don't feel free to explore their ways of seeing and experiencing, their biases and tastes, in a safe setting, then the possibility of self-confrontation and change cannot take place; they will become superficially multicultural, simply parrots of my beliefs. Such ruminations crowded into my tired brain on the way home.

So here I am home: And yes, I am proud that this University is dominated by a commitment to multiculturalism in both theory and practice, but my pride quickly ebbs when I reflect on the gap, though shrinking, between commitment and reality. This shadow falling between the ideal and the actual, of course, is a national phenomenon. And in my remarks I want to address this gap by examining its roots in our locality and nationally confused sense of multicultural vision itself.

What do we mean when we say a multicultural campus? How do we define multicultural? Are women and men cultures? Does multicultural include gays? The economically disadvantaged? Are the poor a culture? The workingclass? The learning impaired, those who are blind or deaf or wheelchairbound? In sum, can all human differences, except those that are unquestionably idiosyncratic, be termed cultural differences? Because we have not answered this question clearly, we find campuses across the nation excluding or marginalizing certain groups at the very time they are flaunting their democratic inclusiveness, a contradiction that exacerbates tensions.

Compounding this confusion over what constitutes the cultural of multicultural is the often seething diversity within each of the broad social categories I have identified. I can underscore the issue this poses for us by asking: Who represents the interests of women of campus? of African Americans? of lesbians? of Latinas? of Jews? of Asian Americans? ad infinitum. The Chancellor's Commission on Civility and Human Relations has held hearings for various student communities on campus to learn what are negative and positive experiences and their recommendations for change. Well, who gets invited to appear before the Commission? This pivotal policy question corresponds to curricular dilemmas. In devising my curriculum in women's history, I introduce students to the historical experience of all kinds of women, but within every group certain voices are included, other voices are omitted, e.g. in my syllabus Cherokee women receive far more attention than Navaho women; the voices of African American female political leaders and enslaved women get more airplay than the voices of African American missionary women. Though I discuss the many pitfalls besetting terms such as "a representative person" of a specific time or community, the quandary remains, as it does at the University policy-making level. For example, the Civility Commission has had trouble setting up a hearing with Hispanic students because the Hispanic community here, as in the country at large, is divided by different social class, regional, religious, and generational interests and affiliations, political differences, and diverse points of origin and language. To be sure, for most groups internal unity is impossible, given the stark reality that every individual is an ensemble of identities, with each of our identities and their affinity groups clamoring for attention, for equity, for freedom of expression.

That's not the end of our confusion over this vision called multiculturalism. Is cultural identity something solid, relatively unchanging? Or is it historically constructed and constantly shifting? Young people at Universities across this country are wrestling with identity questions in a new way. In the past they were handed fairly definite ideas of what some of their identities meant, such as male or female, Jewish or Moslem, African American or Irish American, but all these designations are now generally perceived as historically contingent, in flux. No wonder young people across the country feel so much frustration and helplessness.

And thus, my final question — given the rapidly proliferating classifications of identity and the inevitable identity politics these yield, what particular identity is or at least a consensus that the University is the place where cultural identity is a problematic and explored, how do we decide which cultural difference matters? And are all group differences tolerable? We currently approach this question of which differences matter and how much by simply leaving it up to the specific group to demand their right to join others at the bull's eye of academic discourse and policy making. That path leads to competitive and increasingly separatist organization and ideologies that foment distrust and alienation and undermine whatever chance for community a University might model. Is there any alternative? Campuses throughout the country are looking for leadership out of this frozen sea: Can our University be a flagship?

I want to offer three suggestions. Neither of them without problems, but worth pursuing as we grope toward a more perfect community on our campus and beyond. (1) Let us subordinate the nebulous concept of multiculturalism to another nebulous concept—a socially just community. I am willing to deploy the term multiculturalism until a better one arises, but I would have the University consider advancing beyond toleration and celebration of individual and group differences to addressing in our curriculum, programs, and policies the origins and nature of inequalities in the opportunities different groups of people experience at this particular time and place in history and how those inequalities permeate every institution in our nation, including the University, and, further, how this external political and cultural reality shapes the daily life, including the subjectivities, of students, and faculty and staff. (2) If this campus is to serve as a site where power relations as well as identities are openly examined, defined and redefined, then civility, that is, an attitude or respect for the inquirer, whatever the nature of the inquiry, a sensitivity to the possibility of each individual to change their feelings and views, must guide all interpersonal and intergroup communication. The national alarm over indoctrination, i.e. the charge that multiculturalists seek to impose political correctness, as you know is really a smokescreen for the unwillingness of those with less inclusive notions of social justice and community to defend their intolerance. This in not to deny that demagoguery and bigotry can appear on the left bands of the political spectrum as well as on the right, but to argue that by and large those seeking a more inclusive and just campus are relatively open to controversy and have become scapegoats for the unself-critical projections of those unable to face their fear of change to their familiar ways of thinking and doing. (3) Let us begin to build bridges that will bring diverse groups of campus members together in common endeavors so that stereotypes can be shed and friendships formed across individual and group differences. Happily, such efforts have begun on campus, but they are doomed unless those involved hold informed ideas about social and cultural privilege, vulnerability, marginality, and oppression. So our students must take courses that don't merely expose them to cultures other than their own; If the bridge is to be more than a rickety span over a gaping chasm, these courses must also address power and equity issues. Further, our campus must assume moral leadership in promoting ethic of caring and responsibility for others. How do we foster a spirit of empathy and social compassion? Ah, the premier challenge, but without such a spirit, the bridges will collapse. It's springtime, however. Hillary and Bill are in the white house, so let's be optimistic.

PROGRESS REPORT REGARDING THE MULTICULTURAL CAMPUS

In keeping with the 11/7/92 ALANA agreements

2/12/93	The teaching Assistant was hired for the Office of Third World Affairs.
4/17/93	It was announced that eight new faculty of color have signed contracts to begin teaching for the Fall semester.

Other initiatives taken

3/18/93	Provost Gordon wrote to the Deans, Directors, and Department Chairs and requested that they summarize multicultural activities that occured in their areas since the November Deans and Chair Conference, and what may be planned for the coming year.
3/23/93	An associate director of the Minority Engineering Program was named. The Program provides academic support for minority students enrolled in engineering.
3/23/93	The Chancellor provided funding to the Neuroscience and Behavior Program for a grant that would provide outreach to minority high school juniors to expose them to the sciences, and to encourage them to attend college.
3/23/93	The Campus celebrated Cape Verdean Awareness Week.
3/24/93	On January 11 and 12 the entire staff of the Division of Continuing Education participated in a 3 1/2 hour workshop on social justice and diversity awareness which was conducted by the Social Issues Training Project of the School of Education.
3/29/93	A multicultural seder was held on April 7 in the Campus Center. The event was hosted by Hillel House, the Third World Caucus, and Residential Education.
3/29/93	Guest lecturer, Margarethe Cammermeyer, presented a talk entitled, "Serving in Silence: Descrimination Against Gays and Lesbians in the Military."
3/30/93	The Asian American Association hosted the 10th Annual Asian Night celebration
3/31/93	The campus celebrated GLB Awareness Week 1993.
4/2/93	The new special assistant for minority recruitment and retention in the School of Education is working to establish a transfer program between the school and various junior colleges in an effort to increase minority enrollment.
4/7 & 8/93	Applicants for the position of coordinator of the Jesephine White Eagle Center presented their ideas for the Center during open forums held in the Chadbourne House.
4/9/93	Chancellor O'Brien, Provost Gordon, and Vice Chancellor Robinson wrote to the campus community to find ways to understand the impact of the L.A. Police Officers' trial and to solicit ways of dealing with the issue on campus.
4/14-23/93	The campus remembered the Holocaust through a series of events, culminating in a special Commemorative Service on April 23.
4/15/93	The Division of Student Activities presented a commemoration of the life and work of Dr. Martin Luther King. The UMASS BSU Choir, Amherst College Gospel Choir, and the Holy Temple Church of God Choir performed at the event.
4/17/93	The Five Colleges sponsored a day long colloquium entitled, "L.A. and the Valley One Year Later: Asian-Americans, African-Americans, and Latinos."
4/27/93	In an open letter to the campus community, Chancellor O'Brien responded to the verdicts reached regarding the officers charged with the beating of Rodney King

By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Needed information or items, maybe found at a distance or off the beaten track. A brilliant new alliance brings quick profits and joy to your life. Be a nice person and lose the attitude because someone close to you would really appreciate it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Financial matters demand the lion's share of your attention now. Delays, excessive haste or oversights could jeopardize an important account. Your future is looking bright and adventurous.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not take a money shortage lightly. Additional stress could cause a heated relationship to boil over. Now more than ever, you must act calm and confident.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): People around you are edgy — be tactful and patient. Financial success is attainable once VIPs see that you are your own person. Avoid a tug of war with your loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Certain friends are a financial drain; pay what you owe, but otherwise say "no." Seek more contact with the public — reaching out will give you wider influence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An open, heartfelt declaration can work wonders in romance. Whoever reaches out first will gain the most. Thoughts of prosperity return with a vengeance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An argument over money or romance could erupt without warning. Your calm and disciplined manner will put the fire out. A casual gathering of friends and family proves both fun and relaxing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your personal magnetism wins you dynamic allies. You no longer stand alone and should win despite the odds. Distant activities look promising. Go with the flow and be willing to grow.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): New information discovered puts you in the know. The future takes on a new glow. It may be time to tie the knot. Your family and friends applaud your choice of partner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Financial gains are linked to better communication or travel. Key issues will fall under your control. A favorable response is guaranteed if you do not waver.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): When it comes to dollars and cents, trust your own instincts. Well-intentioned chums may offer advice, but you must decide what is right. Be careful how much information you share with others.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A letter or phone call expressing your desires will put an end to procrastination. Key people want to join your team. Welcome them if doing so will work to your advantage.

narrow. "A half an inch blew their season. That's why I tell our guys it's not worth it [to play with illegal sticks]."

Millon and LoPresti asserted themselves in the fourth quarter, providing outstanding individual efforts which sealed the win for the Gorillas.

Millon, who leads the nation in goals and points per game, reached two career milestones with a behind-the-head score halfway through the fourth quarter. Rutgers goalie John Kidon made a save of a Wes Depp shot, but Millon scooped up the rebound and flicked it into the goal as he was being checked to the ground.

Millon passed Jeff Spooner and Scott Hiller to become the second all-time goal scorer in UMass history (136) and moved into fifth in points scored, also ahead of Hiller (191).

The second-half play of LoPresti made sure that any remaining Rutgers momentum was crushed. He made a number of point-blank, "how'd he do that" stops in the fourth quarter, including four on Rutgers' top attackman Ryan O'Shea.

Defensively, Chris Nentwich and Dennis Kelly, who let O'Shea have nothing in 6-on-6 situations, shined for UMass. Garber praised both, saying Nentwich is "the best defensive midfielder in the nation."

However, the early Bonnie lead would vanish in the second inning, as Ubaldo stroked a triple to drive in Pelis, giving the Minutemen a 4-3 lead. Third baseman Steve Corradi, who would later homer, capped the scoring in the second by driving in Ubaldo with a single.

Greg Dowd picked up the win for UMass, pitching five innings in relief of Telgheder, giving up six runs on nine hits.

"We're still alive in the conference, and we're still alive heading into the A-10 tournament," Stone said. "We just have to keep winning."

From the Press Box: Offensive stars on the weekend for the Minutemen included Corradi (3 for 4, HR, 4 RBI, 2 runs scored on Sunday), LaRocca (2-4, 1 RBI, 2 runs scored on Sunday) and Pelis (5-9, 2 RBI, 4 runs scored on the weekend).

Designated hitter Jeff January (3 for 5, 4 RBI, 1 run scored on Sunday) returned from a hand injury that had kept him out for the last week.

UMass faces the University of New Hampshire at Lorden Field tomorrow at 3 p.m.

Seventh-ranked Gorillas beat Rutgers

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN
The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team, now ranked No. 7 in the country, came from a 4-0 deficit to defeat the Rutgers Scarlet Knights Saturday at Garber Field.

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, bolstered by a 19-save effort by goaltender Tom LoPresti, balanced scoring and a 3-for-3 extra man attack, outscored the Rutgers Scarlet Knights 5-1 in the second half en route to a 10-7 win at Richard F. Garber Field.

The win helped UMass, 8-2 and winners of seven straight, move up three notches to seventh place in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll — their highest national ranking since 1981, when the Gorillas were fourth.

Coach Ted Garber, who wasn't expecting such a climb up the rankings in a week, was happy his team was ranked seventh, but downplayed the rankings' importance.

"Right now the rankings are for people to argue over," Garber said. "They don't matter until May 9th, when they pick the tournament seedings, and we've got four games left."

UMass followed true to recent form Saturday, starting slowly and spotting the Scarlet Knights a 4-0 first quarter lead before outscoring them 10-3 the rest of the way. Four UMass players scored 2 goals apiece and the Gorillas capitalized on Rutgers' second-half mistakes, most notably a three-minute illegal stick penalty on Christian Lamanna.

"That really took the wind out of their sails," said UMass attacker Mark Millon (2 goals, 1 assist). "They were still playing well and all of a sudden, we took over."

"That killed them," Garber said of the Rutgers penalty, given because the pocket of Lamana's stick was illegaly

Baseball captures three from St. Bonaventure

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

Strong pitching performances by Jay Murphy and Jeff Toothaker and great days at the plate by Steve Corradi and Jeff January led the University of Massachusetts baseball team to a three-game sweep of Atlantic 10 rival Saint Bonaventure University this weekend at Earl Lorden Field.

The Minutemen (12-16, 6-8 A-10) won three games in a row for the first time all season, winning both games in the doubleheader on Saturday by the scores of 3-1 and 6-1 and the series finale 16-10 on Sunday.

In the first game of the doubleheader, redshirt sophomore Murphy (2-0) pitched the first of two complete games on the day for the Minutemen, scattering seven hits and striking out seven.

He won his second straight decision, and according to head coach Mike Stone, has solidified his place in the starting rotation, pitching in front of Toothaker.

"We just felt we needed to have some contrast before Jeff Toothaker threw to make him more effective. We'll keep the rotation this way," Stone said.

"I think the coaches are doing a real good job calling the pitches, and I'm setting up the hitters really well," Murphy said. "I've been able to keep them off balance with a lot of off-speed pitches. Control is the key for me."

After falling behind 1-0 in the top of the second, the Minutemen battled back to score three in the home half of the inning.

With shortstop Greg LaRocca and second baseman Joe Mattivello on second and third, catcher Andy Pelis perfectly executed a suicide squeeze, laying one down the third base line and catching the Bonnies' infield off guard.

The Pelis bunt plated LaRocca, and tied the game at 1-1. A single by center fielder Nelson Ubaldo and a double by designated hitter Justin Kelly drove in the other two runs for UMass.

This two-run cushion would be all Murphy needed, as he retired 15 of the last 20 batters, including striking out the side in the fourth inning.

"I haven't done anything different," Pelis said about the success he has found recently. "When the team comes together, it makes it a lot easier on everyone."

The nightcap on Saturday was as successful for the Minutemen on the mound as Toothaker hurled a complete-game, four-hit masterpiece, striking out seven and only walking three.

Toothaker would get all of the support he needed in the fifth off the bat of right fielder Justin Howard, who teed off on a 2-2 delivery from reliever William Harris and deposited it over the left field fence for a grand slam, giving the Minutemen a commanding 6-0 lead.

The Bonnies would scratch across a run in the sixth, making it a 6-1 game, but Toothaker closed the door in the seventh, picking up his fourth win on the season.

The series finale was the complete opposite of Saturday's pitching gems, as the Bonnies jumped on starter Jim Telgheder early in the first inning. First baseman Mike Simmons blasted an offering from Telgheder over the left field fence for a three-run dinger, giving St. Bonaventure a 3-0 lead.

Sortino wins 400th, softball takes three of four

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN
The University of Massachusetts softball team won three out of four games against Princeton and Adelphi this weekend. The team next plays at URI on Tuesday.

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

In sports, as in life, you have to take the good with the bad. The good for the University of Massachusetts softball team was that its 2-1, nine-inning marathon victory over Princeton University on Saturday enabled UMass head coach Elaine Sortino to garner her 400th career victory.

The bad news was that the Tigers 1-0 victory in the nightcap put an end to UMass' seven game winning streak.

UMass bounced back on Sunday, however, sweeping a doubleheader from Adelphi University, 6-0 and 4-0. Sunday's victories enabled the Minutewomen to break the .500 mark for the first time this year, leaving them with a 16-15 overall record.

The Minutewomen, who were leapfrogged by Princeton in the latest Northeast Region poll, earned the victory over the No. 3 team when sophomore center fielder Heather Dorsey singled home the winning run with one out in the top of the ninth. The hit made a winner out of sophomore right-hander Kelly Daut (7-8), who went the distance, giving up six hits and striking out six.

UMass senior ace Darlene Claffey and Princeton's Kristi Jelinek hooked up in a wicked pitcher's duel in the second game. Both pitchers were throwing goose eggs at the opposition until the Tigers were able to push a run across in the bottom of the seventh, making a winner out of Jelinek, who yielded just one hit to the previously red-hot UMass offense. Claffey's record fell to 7-6 for the season.

The UMass bats broke out of their one-day lull on Sunday at Adelphi, led by senior third baseman Laurie Dondarski, who went a combined 4-6 in the two games.

Daut was the game one victor, giving up two hits and evening her record at 8-8. Senior catcher Sherri Kuchinskas added to her all-time home run record at UMass when she belted a solo shot in the first inning. Left fielder Stacey Nichols did her one better in the sixth with a two-run round tripper.

Claffey picked up her eighth win of the year as well in the nightcap, going the distance and surrendering only three hits.

"Both pitchers gave us real solid performances," Sortino said.

Offensively against the Panthers, the Minutewomen were sparked by Dorsey, freshman shortstop Amy Powell and sophomore outfielder Jenn Salisbury.

New policy: weight room varsity only

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

Students will soon be rescheduling their workout time, say Intramural officials.

Franklin C. Wright, the director of recreational sports, said students will no longer be able to use weight room 1 in Boyden. He said the larger, better-equipped weight room will be used solely by varsity athletes.

Currently, weight room 1 is closed off from 2:15 p.m. to 6:15 p.m. for the use of varsity athletes only.

The students no longer able to use weight room 1 must use the smaller weight room two and the universals at Totman Gym and Curry Hicks Cage, said Wright.

Weight room one currently accommodates 55 people at a time and weight room 2 can hold 35. According to Kristie Delbruge, an assistant coordinator of Intramurals, there is often a line to get into the weight rooms at night.

Zulma C. Garcia, the associate coordinator of the Intramural Program, said there is a plan in the works to revamp the equipment at Totman and Curry Hicks.

Garcia said this plan has not received much feedback from the students it will affect. She also said the women's lacrosse field has been placed in the middle of the intramural fields.

Jessica L. Gould, a senior journalism major, said closing the weight room 1 to the UMass public is inconvenient because the other weight rooms are not equipped to handle the overflow of students she forsees.

"I just don't understand why [the varsity athletes] need their own weight room in Boyden when they have two in the Mullins Center," Gould said.

She said weight room 1 has squatting platforms, free weights and more room to work out. Classes will also have to be moved to other weight rooms, further cutting into students' free time, according to Gould.

Gould said varsity athletes already take time away from other students, and now they are planning to take away everthing.

"Are they going to lift 24 hours a day?" Gould said. "I don't think so."

Garcia said the resurrection of three women's teams, the men's tennis team and the addition of hockey has further cut into the Intramural Program.

"Athletic space is at a premium on campus," Garcia said. "I don't know what else is going to happen."

"Are we going to continue to have things taken away from our program by the varsity athletics?" Garcia said.

Aloysius N. Rufe Jr., associate athletic director, said they are hoping to upgrade equipment in other weight rooms in order to "better serve individuals and general physical education classes."

"It's a good investment, I hope everyone can benefit from better equipment," Rufe said.

Athletic Director Robert Marcum said the recommendation to close weight room 1 was made by the weight and strength staff and some administrators.

"We just don't have enough time to get all of our people in," Marcum said.

Marcum said there are over 600 athletes trying to work out in the weight room. He said the recommendation will most likely be implemented in the fall.

Trust fund reform supposed to give Senate more power

Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part series on the reorganization of the University's Division of Student Activities.

By ALYSSA M. OWENS

The Undergraduate Student Senate will bypass the Student Activities Office and work directly with his office in the administration of the Student Activities Trust Fund, said Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Thomas B. Robinson about the impending reorganization of the SATF.

"Student activities need to be student-organized," he said. "I'm interested in working directly with the (Student Senate)."

This will help alleviate past ill will students have felt regarding the SAO's "interference" in student activities, said Michael S. Poster, former speaker of the Senate.

"A lot of accusations have been thrown around," Poster said. "Students have accused the SAO of screwing with numbers and undermining what we've worked for."

Through the reorganization initiated by Robinson, the SAO's operating costs will no longer be payed for by the Student Activities Trust Fund.

The trust fund reform involves removing $33 from the student activities fee annually, the amount used to support the SAO and its employees' salaries, and raising the curriculum fee by the same amount.

Students will continue support the SAO budget on the Indian ambassador set to speak

By SANDRA ROSE
Collegian Staff

India's ambassador to the United States, Kanwal Sibal, is scheduled to visit the UMass-Amherst campus today and lecture in room 176 of the Campus Center tonight at 7:30.

Ambassador Sibal was invited to UMass by the Forum on Developing Nations and the Anti-racism Coalition to address growing concerns of "ethnic violence and the crisis of communalism in India," said Shyamala Ivatury, organizer for the event.

Analysts have stated that Hindu extremism will likely dominate Indian politics in the last decade of the 20th century.

Tension has been mounting in India after last year's destruction of a 463-year-old mosque by Hindu extremist members of the Rastriya Sewak Sangh (RSS) who claim there was a temple dedicated to the birth place of Lord Rama at the site of the mosque.

Officials cite more than 1,500 deaths due to subsequent religious violence erupting in the cities of Calcutta, Bombay and New Delhi.

Last December, Prime Minister Narasimha Rao banned three Hindu organizations and two Muslim organizations. A week later, Rao dismissed the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) provincial government in the states of Uttar Pradesh and dissolved the governments in the states of Himachal Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh and Rajasthan.

BJP leaders such as L.K. Advani, M.M. Joshi and Uma Bharati were among several arrested and charged for destroying the mosque, said official reports.

Reports indicate that 3,000 Muslim mosques and shrines have been identified for future "action."

At turn of century, first women arrive at UMass

The most noticable difference was the presence of women at the college, as the first female student attended Mass Aggie in 1892. Resistance to co-education was so harsh that she left after just one trimester.

About half a dozen "coeds," as they were called, trickled in after the turn of the century, and the first women graduated in 1905. In 1917, Mass Aggie literally emptied as men went off to war, and the door was left open to females.

Co-education was officially established in 1919 with the construction of the first female dorm. The Abigail Adams House stood on the site of today's Graduate Tower low rise, and burned down in 1962.

The war had a profound effect on Aggie, and student life would never be the same. The establishment of an Reserve Officers Training Corps on campus after the war satisfied the federal requirement for military training, and mandatory drill for all students became a thing of the past.

Prayer services were no longer mandatory, and the Old Chapel stopped being used for worship in 1915.

Increasing class size gradually destroyed the old class rivalries, and traditions such as the Sophomore/Freshman rope pull across the pond died out. Following the war, students turned to fraternities and the single sorority (Delta Phi Gamma) to express their loyalties.

After Butterfield's departure in 1924, Edward Lewis became president of the college. He had been teaching English at Aggie for more than 15 years, and would lead the college in a new direction. Under Lewis's leadership female faculty began to expand and more liberal arts majors were introduced. Lewis' successor, Roscoe Thatcher faced the challenge of carrying Mass Aggie through the Great Depression.

Through the late '20s and early '30s, Aggie's population was rising, but no new buildings were being constructed, due to the budgetary cuts of the Depression.

The housing situation, above all, was desperate. The two original dormitories, North and South Colleges, were only capable of housing 8 percent of the student body by 1930. The majority of students lived in fraternity houses or boarded with families in the center of town.

Despite severe lack of funding, Thatcher miraculously managed to push three construction bills through the state legislature during the heart of the Depression, and three buildings the college desperately needed were constructed. Curry Hicks Gymnasium went up in 1931, the Goodell Library in 1933, and at long last a new men's dorm, Thatcher dormitory, was constructed alone at the back of a huge field in 1934.

Ultimately, the Depression caused agriculture to all but vanish. Farming was hardest hit during the Depression, and few students wanted agricultural degrees any longer. To acknowledge the fact that the curriculum was now broadly based, the college's name was changed to the Massachusetts State College in 1931.

Hugh Potter Baker succeeded Thatcher as president in 1933. The 1930s were a stagnant period for Mass State. The Depression lingered, and no new construction was taking place. The small college, which was now professed to be a liberals arts institution, still subsisted on agricultural academic buildings. Space for liberal arts classes was hard to find. The Old Chapel was renovated in 1936, becoming the only exclusively liberal arts classroom building on campus.

President Baker did manage to push through the construction of two new dormitories. Lewis dormitory was constructed next to Thatcher as a men's dorm in 1940. The second women's dormitory, Butterfield, was built in 1941.

Baker led the college through World War II, and struggled to compensate for the changes war brought. Men again vanished from the campus. The college would have closed, except for female students who began attending in record numbers.

With the close of World War II came the single most important event in the history of this University. The "GI Bill" went into effect, and veterans were told that they could attend college for free. Thousands flocked to the tiny Mass State College. To compensate for the population explosion, Baker realized that massive growth was crucial.

A tiny sleepy town college was about to be transformed into a massive University.

'Kid's Carnival' set up to help troubled youngsters

Time, friendship and enthusiasm were donated by college students and local businesses Sunday afternoon to provide a day filled with activity and fun for children living in local homeless shelters.

Organized by Laura Rosenbaum, a senior marketing major, and Debbie James, a senior human resources major, and sponsored by Volunteer Initiative Blending Education and Service, a "Kid's Carnival" gave troubled chidren ages 2 to 17 a brief respite from their troubled lives.

Rosenbaum said bringing college students together with underpriviledged children from shelters, was meant to make a connection between the two lifestyles and was a huge success.

Members of fraternities, sororities, the UMass football team and cheerleaders dedicated their time and skills for the day to entertain the children.

Jill Perry, a junior marketing major, became a "big sister" for the day to Justin, age 6. Together they visited booths, played games, ate food and shared each other's company.

Beth Fabricant, a member of Chi Omega, worked at the "Thank You" booth, where the children signed their names in appreciation for the donations.

"The children really deserve opportunities like this," Fabricant said. "And I think there should be more days like this available to them."

Craig Indek and Scott Ingulli, both members of Alpha Delta Phi, worked security at the event, said they decided to volunteer their time because they enjoyed kids and wanted to be able to spend the day with them.

Peter Pan Bus Company donated transportation for the children from Holyoke and Amherst. The company also provided a remote control mini-sized bus which was a hit for the younger children.

Andy Spear, a senior finance major, and Danny Krosin, a senior accounting major, both members of Sigma Alpha Mu, organized a pitching booth for the kids to practice their skills.

Both Spear and Krosin agreed that the activities were an important way for kids to get involved, and provided lollipops as prizes for each child to show that everyone of them was a winner.

Assistant football coach Jerry Gordon was in charge of distributing out over 150 games donated by Milton Bradley for each child who participated in throwing a football through a tire hanging from a tree.

"We told the guys on the football team about this event and then left it up to them if they wanted to help out," Gordon said. "It's great to have so many of them here to hang out with the kids and throw the football around."

"Playing catch with the football players has been my favorite event so far," Aaron, 7, from Sunderland said.

UMass police officers also volunteered their time so the children would have the chance to ask questions about their job. The officers allowed the children to sit on the police horses, and Officers Joe Mieczkowski and David Hastings told children what it was like to be police on bikes.

The carnival for children will now become an annual event, according to both Britt Ruhe, the coordinator of VIBES and Tom O'Brien, the dean of the School of Management, who started the program five years ago.

Rosenbaum said she was thankful to all of the businesses and college students who made the event possible.

Health service offers students bodily answers

Editor's note: This is the first in a two-part series on peer health educators.

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

The peer health education program began in the early 1970s to answer growing concerns over student's health decisions, according to Pam Gonyer, the director of health education at the University.

The program was originally divided into two parts. There were two year-long courses, one dealing solely with drugs and alcohol and the other with sexually transmitted diseases and issues of sexuality.

Gonyer said the program offers a great deal to students who take the course.

"It is a two-semester course with a strong academic proponent that explores good health decisions and contemporary health issues," Gonyer said.

Gretchen Krull, a former peer health education professor, was with the program for over 20 years. She said she became affiliated with the program while a graduate student at the University.

Krull directed the peer sexuality program until last May. She also created the Not Ready for Bedtime Players, a group which performs skits to raise students' awareness about sexual issues.

Krull said during an HIV/AIDS faculty and staff committee meeting she suggested using theater skills to reach the campus community.

She said in 1987, Al Winder, a faculty member in the theater department, offered a one-semester class that wrote a script for the Bedtime Players.

According to Krull, some of the original script is still being used.

Krull said the class only performed once, at a School of Public Health banquet. The class was not offered again and the script was put away.

The peer sex educators resurrected the script during the spring semester in 1988, said Krull. She said she had her students work on it as part of their outreach program.

Krull said the program became an extra credit project that a few of the original players joined. The Not Ready for Bedtime Players is still in existence and is under the direction of teaching assistant Nancy Raymond. Auditions are held every semester to recruit new players.

The peer health educators also reach the campus community through other methods. Tables on the Campus Center Concourse and workshops are some of the ways the group uses to reach out to students.

Gonyer said since July of 1979, over 1,300 peer educators have been trained. She said these educators have led more than 3,500 programs which have reached over 43,250 students.

"Students reach other students better or in different ways," Gonyer said.

Myra Edelstein, a health educator at University Health Services and the new director of the program, said this is one of the benefits of the program. She said she believes students remember the things that other students tell them.

Gonyer said the program also gives students a chance to facilitate workshops and learn how to be educators.

Diversity of language looked at by professor

By EVELYN A. DE JESUS
Collegian Staff

The United States may not have an official language, but that does not mean the nation agrees on the use of English or another languages in the country's daily life, said a Harvard University professor.

Marc Shell, professor of comparative literature at Harvard University, questioned which language should predominate in America.

Shell explained that language diversity has been part of the North American landscape since the beginning of U.S. history, first because of Native Americans, and then because European settlers.

"What is the link between the oppressive and the oppressed?" Shell said. "How could people with one language get along with the other?

Shell cited one argument in favor of the use of English, saying, "The United States should have one language, as one flag, and it should be English."

He also talked about the case of Quebec, in which there is both an English-speaking and French-speaking population.

"American culture is just starting to know its multilingualism," Shell said.

Shell, who said he favored neither bilingualism or unilingulism, said there are problems with having no official language.

"In January of this year, the governor of Puerto Rico signed an amendment making English one of the official languages along with Spanish," Shell said.

"Now we have two languages, two hymns and two flags," Shell quoted the governor as saying.

Concerning this case, Shell asked if Spanish would be a breach of the linguistic melting pot in the United States.

Reading, writing & artillery

In a social studies class, two weeks ago in Dartmouth Mass., a boy was stabbed to death by one of his peers. I can't begin to fathom being stabbed in a classroom, my social studies world always seemed so safe. . .

Social studies class, 8th grade — I had Mr. Fiore, "a cool teacher." I sat in the fourth row, right behind Tommy Bizarro. Tommy was a troublemaker, always doing something hilarious, making Mr. F mad, and earning Tommy the title of class clown. Maybe sitting behind Tommy wasn't all that safe. . .

Stephanie
EISENBERG

Three weeks ago, teachers caught two fifth graders smoking pot in an Ohio elementary school. The kids were getting high under the slide in the playground. When this issue was brought up for discussion, it became apparent that others in the class had also tried it.

My fifth grade class was pretty exciting too; I had Mrs. Rocchio, the loudest teacher in Cantiague Elementary School. I was quite a little chatterbox back then, and Mrs. Rocchio used to scream in that loud shrill voice of hers, "Missy Eisenberg, are you talking again?" and I would just giggle, secretly loving the attention.

In New York City, a recent study confirmed that 85 percent of all city ninth graders carry some sort of a weapon to school. When asked why it is necessary to carry artillery to school, some of the teens replied that it's better to attack before being attacked.

I guess there was some violence in my ninth grade study hall. There was a group of about six of us who hated study hall because we had to be quiet, so we sought revenge on poor, unsuspecting, deaf Mrs. Kupfelberg. There was this one time when good ol' Tommy B tore off the top of a desk (the kind with the metal bars underneath the wooden top to hold your books) and declared it a barbeque. We tried to stick one of my friends to it with chewing gum, so she could be "barbequed." The whole thing ended with Mrs. K crying, Tommy in the vice principal's office, and me and my friend tangled in the vertical blinds — that was a pretty violent day.

All across the United States many teachers and students notice the decline in class size between the tenth and 11th grade. Lately, many teens after their 16th birthday are opting to drop out of school and enter the work force rather than further their education. They enter the job place without so much as a high school diploma.

I can't fathom not attending 11th grade. My favorite class was Mrs. Antonucci's English class. Mrs. A let us read Shakespeare out loud, and I was Lady Macbeth. I still remember my dying scene: I stood on Mrs. A's desk and crooned "out damn spot, out I say. . ." as Mrs. A sat there not knowing whether or not to laugh or to yell. I was quite a ham in those days, but I still can't imagine missing 11th grade.

My schooling experiences while comical, all have one thing in common: they were safe and happy. My experiences don't differ much from those of friends I've met at UMass. But it's been eight years since I've attended the fifth grade, and so on, and the world has changed since then.

We used to be able to justify violence, drugs and illiteracy by attributing them as problems of inner city schools, but we can't do that any more. The world has changed too much in the past couple of years and the children today are facing problems we as a generation never had to deal with. If the world keeps changing the way it has been, I'll be able to say with much displeasure I was a part of the last generation to have a safe and happy childhood.

Watergate? Or just immaturity?

As residents of Orchard Hill we would like to comment on the sad state of affairs during the campaign for Orchard Hill Area Government president. Both sides were responsible for slander and making several unsupported and/or false accusations toward their opponents, causing the whole affair to become nothing more than a mudslinging contest.

Carrying this even further, James Taylor and his campaign manager devoted a portion of a WOCH radio show to calling David Krendel offensive names with no other purpose than to insult his character. However, these incidents are minor in comparison to the harassment of an OHAG member accused by James Taylor and his aides of defacing his campaign posters. This OHAG member was sent offensive phone messages and constantly watched on his floor by people representing James Taylor. These activities were continued to such an extent that police intervention was necessary.

We believe that these actions were inappropriate and immature, and to use a public forum, such as a campaign, for personal attacks is unwarranted and unethical. College students are supposedly adults, yet this behavior was frighteningly reminiscent of grade school. Through their actions, the candidates made a mockery of OHAG, the elections and themselves.

Fascism hits Waco, Texas

For weeks Americans across the nation were tuned into the events in Waco, Texas by a blitzkrieg of media attention. We listened to various opinions about David Koresh and I know that many Americans wanted him dead.

Fascism exists in America. We just witnessed it in Texas. A man there picked up a copy of the Bible and decided what it could mean to him. He searched for what this book, sacred to so many, could tell him about life. He looked at the world around him through those words. Those words became a source of strength to him. And so he spoke those words to others. He told them what he saw and they began to look at their own worlds through those words. Then the man gathered his listeners together and formed a community. And for that we killed him.

Romin
THOMSON

I say we killed him knowing that whether the final end came in the form of murder or suicide is still unknown. I feel we killed them long before they burned. The men, women and children in Waco were given two options. The first was to leave the compound and surrender themselves to federal authorities. They would then be forced to spend their lives in a prison, separated and stripped of their ability to practice their way of life.

The second option was to stay in the compound until death.

The founding citizens of our nation used to rally in the streets of colonial America and shout the words, "live free or die." They didn't see death as an irrational option when compromised of their rights — and neither did the people in Waco. Whether the decision to die was forced or voluntary is no issue. We killed those people.

Some say they deserved to die. They call the residents of the compound lunatics. They say the Branch Davidians were crazy and deserved to die. Believe it or not, that is what the Germans said so many years ago. It is said all over the world by groups who feel right. This is the right way, Hitler said, it is our way and it is they who live the wrong way and for that he killed Jews.

We killed Americans. Why did we kill Americans? I can't sleep with this. The question is floating around my mind. It is an unwanted pest and an undue burden. Why did we care?

Janet Reno said she "did it for the children." The FBI told her the children were being abused physically and perhaps sexually. But there was no proof. No person could prove that Koresh, who admitted spanking the children as punishment, was illegally abusing them. Has society become so suspect that we need to hold our kids up in front of our neighbors and say, "Look! No bruises! I don't beat mine!"

In 1985 the Philadelphia Police Department was involved in a standoff with another cult-style group called MOVE. The government showed little restraint there. After bombing the home they had surrounded, 11 were left dead and 60 neighboring houses burned to the ground.

This is fascism. It's when a society spreads propaganda calling a group guilty until they can prove their innocence. If it is not stopped it will happen again. Within the next decade we will watch another group of "lunatics" burn to death on our television and maybe someday this country will have a holocaust of its own and we'll burn up millions of "lunatics." Or maybe we can all think about the words "live free or die" and avoid the next invasion.

Pagans desire mutual respect

On Tuesday, the UMass Pagan Students had a table in the Campus Center Concourse, where we distribute information about neo-paganism for people who are interested, and we do tarot readings and rune readings as a fundraiser. Unfortunately, our day was marred by a pathetic individual who purported to be a "true Christian" and was utterly bigoted and hostile toward any faith not his own.

He told us we were devil worshippers, that Christ was the One True Way and moaned aloud for the demons to be cast out. Finding that our reaction was to ask him to leave and finally flick water at him, he left, only to return and distribute tracts which explained that not only was Jesus the only way, but the Jews had killed Jesus. (Ah, an equal opportunity bigot. How ironic someone was distributing this choice piece of literature during Holocaust Memorial Week.)

This person then harassed and berated the people waiting in line to have their cards read. For this, the UMass Pagan Students are heartily sorry. While we do not often experience individuals of this sort, we realize there will always be people who are threatened by different belief systems.

When we set out a public information table, we are always well aware that someone of this sort may stop by. However, we feel we must apologize to the people waiting in line. You didn't ask for this, you just wanted a reading and you had to deal with this person's ignorance and hatred.

After a call to campus security, this person left. Neo-pagans strongly believe that everyone has a right to religious expression and freedom. We have no quarrel with any other belief system, including Christianity, because we believe each individual must come to the religion right for them.

Our respect for members of the Christian faith comes from having talked with many people who often held beliefs very different from our own, yet who were open-minded and willing to listen to others. Such Christians can only have our highest regard, and their faith commands our respect.

To the individual who stopped by our table: if you wish your faith to be respected by us, belittling ours is not the answer. If you wish to win converts, bigotry is not going to interest us or any other moral person. If you were trying to hold yourself up as a shining example of the Christian faith, well, we're not impressed.

If you want to find out what we're about, if you're willing to listen rather than lecture, come to one of our meetings, held every Saturday at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center, and we would be more than willing to explain how neo-paganism is a collection of earth-centered religions interested in worshipping the pre-Christian gods and goddesses. If you're unwilling to come with an open mind and prefer to soapbox and perpetrate the type of religious hate responsible for so many wars and deaths, then stay at home.

To the UMass community:

The goddesses of Ed/Op would like to take a moment to remind you we are heading into the last two weeks of publication. Now is the time to figure out what your life, in and out of class, will be like without your daily crossword puzzle. More importantly, now is the time to get those thoughts, the ones that have been brewing so long that they are now fermented, typed, double spaced and sent to us — ASAP!

All we ask is for you to keep in mind (try to leave us a little bit of space) that since we do have a lot of material, please keep your thoughts short and to the point — this way we can get as many as possible off the desk and into the paper for all of the wonderkind at UMass to read.

Have a great day, and ask yourself, "Is there life without the Ed/Op page?"

Ivatury explained that during British colonialism in India, the methods of divide and conquer were used to create ill feelings between the Hindu and Muslim communities who, for the most part, had lived together in harmony. This divide and conquer tactic ultimately led to the creation of two countries from the Indian sub-continent — Pakistan and India.

"It is clear that the BJP is the political arm of the right-wing Hindu organization RSS. The BJP relies primarily on the religious nature of the majority Hindu voters. Their representation in the Indian Parliament grew from five to 85 to 118 in a matter of five years, becoming the major opposition group in the (the lower house of the Indian parliament)," read pamphlet prepared by organizers.

Support for the BJP has increased because of the deteriorating economic situation in India. The platforms for BJP and RSS are appealing to a number of youths who support the idea of Hindutva or a Hindu Nation.

"The BJP is also using the blatantly false notion that affirmative action for lower-caste Hindus, Muslims and other minority groups has disadvantaged the majority Hindu community to garner support," said Prasad Venugopal, one of the organizers.

"The BJP version of Hindutva will effectively mean the massacre or uprootment of millions of Indian Muslims. In India, as in other parts of the world, people will have to devise better means to secure the rights and safety of minorities," Venugopal said.

Organizers are calling upon Ambassador Sibal to find out what steps the Indian government is taking to prevent ethnic violence and communalism in a land inhabited by approximately 130 million Muslims, total population of 900 million.

Grant Ingle, director of Human Relations, helped in guiding student organizers to different offices for funding. He encouraged students to attend and stressed the "opportunity to meet a representative from another country."

The lecture is only the beginning of what organizers said they hope will be a continuing dialogue concerning the events that are unfolding in India.

After Ambassador Sibal's lecture, an open reception will be held in room 1101 in the Campus Center.

A follow-up panel discussion is scheduled for Thursday in room 176 Campus Center.

Marion Ross talks about TV, theater

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Marion Ross, who stars as Sophie Berger in CBS' Brooklyn Bridge and as "Mrs. C" in the syndicated Happy Days, will perform tonight through May 2 at StageWest in Springfield as Melissa in the theater production Love Letters.

How has the network television industry changed from (Happy Days) 1973 to (Brooklyn Bridge) 1993?

Oh, it's very different because there's so much competition, we did not have cable at that point (1973). If you had a nice Tuesday night spot people would stay home. They had a much more orderly life. Now it's very hard to get people's attention. They've got videos. They run out and rent movies. This is all new stuff. It's a very different world. It's very difficult to get a series that would last that long or become a part of people's lives. Happy Days runs twice a day in some areas.

Do you anticipate staying with Brooklyn Bridge?

Well, to tell you the truth, the business changes. You know, you think you'd like to stay with something and nothing lasts very long. We don't have to worry about it. Although we did say that about Happy Days, and look! We stayed for 11 seasons — 11 seasons!

I was just in New York talking about Brooklyn Bridge. Did you know CBS got 25,000 letters, about Brooklyn Bridge being taken off? And now, low and behold, we're back now every Saturday at 9:30 for the next six weeks on CBS. These are shows nobody has seen. They are brand new ones but we're finished shooting them. Now I'm free to go off and do Love Letters.

Where do you find the time to pursue so many projects?

I have a lot of help to tell you the truth. I don't have to attend to all the details anymore. I hardly do anything any more. I have a lady, like a housekeeper and then I have a secretary, then I have a manager, then I have a press agent and then I have an agent, then I have an attorney and then I have an accountant and then I have a gardener. Who else do we have around here? Oh we have two gardeners and then we have various workmen who come every day to fix things. We say, "A day without a workman is a day without sunshine." We have to make A LOT OF MONEY to keep everybody working, and we buy things everyday.

On the set of Brooklyn Bridge do you feel younger actors and actresses look to you for as a source of experience?

I do. I do very much. I'm a very easy going person, and I like to set a tone at work where you all get along. And I don't get annoyed with little things that happen. And I think that you can set the tone, and that's the style. Then everybody tries to act nice. And tries to get the job done, whereas if you've got someone at the top who's a little bit temperamental and crabby, that'll sift down to everybody and they think that's the way to be.

Do you prefer working in the theater or for television?

I don't really think of it as preferring one or the other. What I'm finding is that you should train in the theater because you're out there alone and you've got to carry this. You really learn your instrument.

But once you know how to act, then it's intriguing to see if you can handle the complicated technical commands of a one camera, for instance. Three camera is another thing. It's continuously stopping, continuously starting over. To do 30 takes is quite common because you have to shoot the same scene from another angle. Stop now. Over the shoulder. Now close up. Now master shot, now. Y'know? The skill.

You have to have so much technique to concentrate, to be able to pretend this has never happened to you before, to remember you picked up the fork with this hand at this word. Wow. Your mind has got to be in 20 places at the same time. And you can do it. You can cry. Your emotions are on one plane. Your other part of your brain is noticing that you lifted your hand and scratched your head here. And you've got to hit this mark. Have an accent. Wow. It's intriguing.

Tell us about Love Letters.

These two people [Melissa and Andrew] have this relationship all their lives. It starts with the love letters they write each other in the third grade and the little notes, "Don't pull my hair the next time you see me." Then you get to know these two people and the story of their lives. It's very funny. It's very true and ultimately very touching. What's fun for actors is that there's no technical production. We just sit and read these letters. We don't look at one another. We sit there, like for a concert, so this is going to be a vacation for Paul Michael and me.

Explain the challenges involved in metamorphosing between the different ages?

That's easy. When you're an actor, that's the magic. That's what I love about acting. I have very easy access to all my feelings because I act so much. My feelings are right up there where I can get a hold of them. I love to be different people. I love to be different ages. It would be hard for me at this point to have to do the same thing too much because I'm not geared for it. It would make me goofy. I like to jump around, like the way Robin Williams is. The way he jumps in and out of different personas. We like to do that. It's fun for us. My son does a lot of improv and my daughter does also. Even when they were children at home we were very playful in that way.

That's surprising because audiences often read about celebrities discouraging their children from acting because it's such a difficult industry to break into.

Well, I didn't really tell them to do it. But we did it around the house so much. It is a terrible business. You wouldn't tell your children to do this, but if they want to do it, it's their choice. You wouldn't discourage them.

Have you had your driving determination from the very beginning?

I guess it does come from a lot of energy. Kind of a work-a-holic. An overachiever. Whatever creates that kind of desire to overachieve — the need to overachieve. But you'll find most people that are overproductive — it's because they work harder. And I'm not trying to put a value on that. I don't say it's any better. We're all going to die and what's the difference? But it's fun. I like the rush of adrenaline every day — to get up and I have a lot of plans every day, a lot of stuff I want to do. And I also feel capable of making the world to be the way I want it to be. I don't wait around a lot. It's an awful feeling to feel impotent and frustrated and to wait for something wonderful to happen. You have to make something happen. And even if it doesn't work out quite right you're doing something.

I like your word choice: "overachiever" instead of "work-a-holic."

And you know I don't think there's anything wrong with the word "work-a-holic." Or you know, people say you're a "people pleaser." You know what happens to people pleasers? They please an awful lot of people, so what's so terrible? I really want everything to work well and everybody to have a good time and get the thing done. And that's when you're working on a series like Brooklyn Bridge or Happy Days, when you have a group that works together like a family — a lot of good spirit, a lot of good tone, and then you make this wonderful product. That's nice.

How do you choose your roles?

Now, I'm coming to a lovely place where I can't really take some of these roles. They're not good enough. Even if I'd like to play them, they're not good enough. They're not good career moves. So you have to say, "No, I won't do it." Then part of you wants to do it anyway. But your agents advise you. Most of the time I do it anyway.

What constitutes a bad career move?

You might want to be in a film, but the part isn't big enough. Or they're not paying enough money. It's a step backward. (Voice is soft.) So even if you might love it — "I want to be in that film" — it's not a good move so you say, "No, I can't." Then, you wait for the next one. Sometimes you have to be more selective than other times. If you just want to get the rent paid, then you'll have different career moves. I always say I love Michael Caine's career. I always feel as if he must say, "Really? Where's it shooting? What country is it shooting in? OK, I'll go. It's on location? And where is it? You're gonna send me the script? Oh, never mind. I'll be there."

May I ask you how old you are?

Yes, I'm getting very old. I'm actually so cute when you see me. I'm 64 — a thousand years old. I am. So there you are — which is very good news for everybody. I have a wonderful boyfriend — very handsome — and he'll be in Love Letters with me, Paul Michael. We're really cute together.

What do you consider your career triumph to be thus far?

I really do consider Brooklyn Bridge to be, because it was so unexpected. And the response to the show was so unexpected. We made Brooklyn Bridge without a pilot. They [critics] really couldn't write anything about it. And when that one hour show hit the airwaves, the writers and Gary Goldberg and everybody would come down to the set. And everybody worked so hard, they had dark circles under their eyes. And they would be holding handfuls of faxes that were coming in. Never in the annals of television — raving, raving, raving. It was like all work stopped while more handfuls of these came in. People had a showing on the lot at Paramount and we couldn't go because we were still shooting. But people were coming out of that thing with tears in their eyes saying, "Oh, my God. I didn't know television could be this good." That was our first two-parter. They're just superb shows and I'll always be proud of them.

'Mrs. C' takes to the stage

Happy Days mom stars as Melissa in Love Letters

COURTESY DCO PUBLIC RELATIONS
Marion Ross

She was mother to Richie and Joanie, "Marion" to Howard and "Mrs. C" to Fonzie. Marion Ross, star of the immensely popular Happy Days and Brooklyn Bridge on CBS, will perform tonight in the theater production, Love Letters, at StageWest in Springfield.

Letters is a love story that chronicles the lives of Andrew Makepeace Ladd III and Melissa Gardner, two privileged New Englanders, through the letters they wrote to each other from childhood until the later years of their lives.

"There is a shred of truth to these letters. The actors get to keep their script on stage. It feels as if you are listening into someone's journal," says Rebecca Strang, director of public relations for StageWest.

Marion Ross plays the role of Melissa and Paul Michael plays Andrew tonight through Sunday, May 2.

Paul Michael's first major role was with Judy Holliday in Bells are Ringing. He is a veteran of dozens of Broadway shows including: Whoopup, Thirteen Daughters, Bajour, Do Re Mi, Tovarich, Breakfast at Tiffanys, Zorba the Greek and Man of La Mancha. While performing on New York stages, he also starred in the TV series Muggsy and played a running role in the soap Dark Shadows. He also recently completed work in the film Mask of Red Death starring Patrick McNee. He recently co-starred with Marion Ross in the premiere of the Hindi Brooks comedy, The Whole Half.

Ross can currently be seen as Sophie Berger in Brooklyn Bridge. Ross is well known for her portrayal of Mrs. Cunningham for 11 years on Happy Days. She won critical raves for her portrayal of Amanda in The Glass Menagerie at La Jolla Playhouse and for her one woman show A Lovely Night for the National Women's Theatre project at Los Angeles' UCLA. On Broadway she starred opposite Jean Stapleton in Arsenic and Old Lace. Other theatre credits include the national tour of Steel Magnolias with Barbara Rush, Independence, and a Long Days Journey into Night.

StageWest is located at One Columbus Center in downtown Springfield. Take the Springfield Center exits off Route 91 exit 6 if travelling north and exit 7 if travelling south. Parking is available in the Columbus Center garage above the theatre.

Performances of Love Letters are Tuesday, Wednesday and Sunday at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. Matinees at 2 p.m. For more information (413) 781-2340.

level set by the fiscal year '93 budget through the curriculum fee, while any budget increases are footed by the state, say Senate officials. They said the SAO had projected an increase of $67,025 for next year and reported the SAO's operating budget at $523,000 for fiscal year '93.

The SATF fee is currently $112.50 a year for full-time undergraduates.

The rest of the student activities fee, $84 a year after a $4.50 increase for fiscal year '94, will remain in the trust fund for student programs, agencies and businesses.

Poster said the average student can expect a more customer-friendly and efficient SAO in the coming year.

He said Robinson's plan will bring greater autonomy to the Senate in making decisions about student activities.

"Students will have more control," Poster said. "And we will no longer have to report to SAO."

Robinson said while the relationship between the Senate and the SAO will change, the SAO will continue to be an advisory body and both will continue work together in day-to-day operations.

"There will not be the reporting line for the [Senate] to SAO," Robinson said. "I hope it will be viewed as more of a partnership."

Tense relations between the Senate and the SAO have been building for years, partly because of a failure to specify the roles of both organizations, said SAO organizational advisor Margaret Arsenault.

"It was never spelled out, so it got to a point of crisis," she said.

Robinson said he first heard about the Senate's dissatisfaction with SAO when he visited the University last spring.

"A number of students told me about campus issues and problems," Robinson said. "A very prominent one dealt with the Division of Student Activities."

Soon after becoming vice chancellor, Robinson met with students, SAO employees and administrators.

Robinson said he heard reports of infighting, issues over the management of the trust fund, disagreement over what Registered Student Organizations are for and who has control over what.

"Maintaining the status quo was not good," he said.

At that time, Robinson got the idea for the reorganization.

"My conclusion was that, while people have attempted with much dedication to resolve relational problems, there was a more fundamental piece that was a problem — the trust fund itself," Robinson said.

"I decided that what was really needed was to break up the trust fund and get SAO out from under the trust fund," he said.

In that way, the SAO would be better able perform an administrative role that is more advisory than "telling what to do," Robinson said.

Robinson's reorganizational plan was quickly brought before the Board of Trustees, which passed the plan earlier this semester.

Robinson said even though the plan to reorganize has passed, there are many details that must be worked out and it will take time to adapt to the new system.

"This doesn't solve anything, but this is the first piece in place which will allow us to move forward," Robinson said.

Although the roles of the Senate and the SAO will be altered, it is unclear in what way they will relate, said Peter W. Roaf, the Senate's treasurer.

"It's still a little sketchy," Roaf said. "We're looking for future autonomy, but exactly what that will mean is yet to be determined."

The whole question of the Senate's autonomy will have to be examined in the future, Brainerd said.

"You hear students say they'd get total autonomy over the trust fund. I don't think that's the reality," Brainerd said. "They'll have more responsibility, but we're still part of the administration."

Robinson said the new director for the SAO, who will probably be hired over the summer, will help develop the specific relationships of the Senate and the SAO.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): When it comes to turning a profit, you are in your element. Even if you overlook something today, it will be provided. By late afternoon, you will be walking on air!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A good day for projects you can handle alone. Your brain, like your body, needs a rest once in a while. When working on complicated tasks, take a break now and then.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Those who awake feeling refreshed can give a good account of themselves at work. Contact a banker or accountant about a monetary question. Complete pending assignments before starting a new one.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Going too far too fast could lead to trouble. Although yesterday's events have won you new support, you are not immune from criticism. Romance intensifies.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): With patience, even the impossible can sometimes be accomplished. Advance planning is essential. Diplomacy and compromise can nip marital tiffs in the bud.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep the sarcasm out of your conversations with a partner or rival. You must train yourself to be more tolerant and less willful. A calm, take charge attitude does wonders at work.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The first idea is not always the best one. The second suggestion may also be a failure. Persevere! Afternoon could bring the right answer. Once you change your thinking, the world seems glorious.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): What you have worked for is yours by right. It need not be shared with idlers. Let your past experience guide you in making key financial decisions. If necessary, consult auto repairmen.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The extra push provided by a coworker or key associate should guarantee excellent returns for all concerned. Use you special skills to their fullest advantage.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A secret wish may be granted despite the fact that certain allies are skeptical. It could mean extra cash or a promotion! Get ready to end a relationship that is going nowhere.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Something that transpires today is the result of brilliant and imaginative planning. You should come out all the richer for it. Group projects and team sports are favored.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): When it comes to turning a profit, you have a record that others envy. A competitor may try to change the rules this morning. By being prepared, you can win. Build savings.

He talked about controversies about language in the workplace and how the U.S. Supreme Court certified the right to have unilingual rights.

On the other hand, he said, the Court has given permission to citizens to depose in Spanish. He said it depended on the audience, the jury and the judge.

because of a soaked spring. Add a rash of injuries and you will find that this team is quite happy where they are considering their setbacks.

"I tell you," said Sortino, "this is a team that has hit every wall and are still here. These kids have a lot of character and they are going to do something before this season's over.

Collegian sportswriter Greg Sukiennik: West: Phoenix Suns; East: Cleveland Cavaliers.

Sunday Sports Live's Jim Cline: West: Phoenix Suns; East: New York Knicks.

On to the real predictions.

Here are my picks for the NBA Finals, along with the best match-up of the first round.

Seattle vs. Utah: This first rounder should be a battle, despite Utah's slump as of late. For a No. 6 seed, Utah could prove to be dangerous. Karl Malone and Shawn Kemp should go at it inside, providing one of the more competitive shows all year.

My picks: Seattle and Chicago. Why? I really don't want to pick New York or Phoenix, just because I went with the obvious in the NCAAs. Kemp and Jordan are the two most exciting players in the NBA, and going head-to-head would be amazing.

Did you see that?

• Rodney Rogers and his declaration of independence from Wake Forest.

• Shaq taking down the backboard in Brendan Byrne Arena.

• That great sports-talk show on WMUA on Thursday nights from 6-7 p.m., Sportsline. I know you can't see it, but listen to it. Who said 'MUA doesn't have anything worth hearing?

Softball to face URI

Team hopes to find victory on the road

By JASON NASH
Collegian Staff

Four-hundred and two and counting.

After winning her 400th career victory on Saturday and then winning the next two out of three for the weekend, University of Massachusetts softball head coach Elaine Sortino looks to tack on two more wins today at 3 p.m. with a doubleheader in Kingston, Rhode Island against the University of Rhode Island Rams (9-25 overall, 2-6 for fifth place in the A-10).

"I tell you it wasn't any different than number 398 or 399," said Sortino, about number 400. "That was the furthest thing from mind during that game on Saturday."

Sortino remained serious when asked to look back at her career and said simply that she felt like she had won a lot of games.

"All we were thinking about on Saturday was beating Princeton. And I'll remember this especially only because this team is special to me and we've all been through a lot together."

From the three of four UMass won this weekend, the Minutewomen are now over the elusive .500 hump for the first time in a month.

"I can't say how much this means," exulted Sortino. "We've been trying to climb out of that hole for a while now. Mentally, it meant a lot to all of us, because it tells us that this team is going somewhere."

As for today's contest, the Minutewomen (16-15 overall, 7-1 for first in the A-10) head to Rhode Island at a time when the UMass pitchng seems to be on it's best run of the season. Sophomore Kelly Daut was named Atlantic 10 Player of the Week yesterday after running up a record of 3-0 with one run allowed in 19 innings work. Throw in senior ace Darlene Claffey who's sporting a 2.13 ERA and the Minutwomen become near untouchable from the hill.

"I was happy for Kelly, she deserved that award" said Sortino, "and Darlene has been throwing as hard as I've ever seen Darlene Claffey throw. I think this is the best staff on the east coast."

As for URI, they remain a young ball club, as eight of their top 10 hitters are either freshmen or sophomores. Rhody comes in batting a meager .230 from the plate, while opponents are snacking on Ram pitching to the tune of .310.

Sortino, who usually lives by the motto of "never take anyone lightly", remained very cautious about today's matchup, despite URI's poor statistics.

"Rhode Island is always a tough place to play for us," Sortino said. "We'll need to get on the scoreboard early and establish ourselves as the aggressor."

With 31 games in their back pocket Sortino spoke with a certain pride about this team. After starting their season with a poor record from a tough west coast trip, UMass came back east only to find themselves confined to gymnasium ball,

Men's track hits stride

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's track team headed north this weekend to participate in the annual Dartmouth Invitational Meet.

It is always a good sign when your top athletes are competing at championship levels. With the Eastern Conference Championships only two weeks away, the men's track team is starting to hit their stride as they posted some pretty impressive performances at Dartmouth.

"We had a good afternoon," said Coach Ken O'Brien. "We placed in just about all of the event groups."

Undefeated is a word seldom heard in college sports, but sophomore Tom Galligani has earned this impressive distinction winning the triple jump at all four meets he's participated in so far. His jump of 46 feet 9 3/4 inches was the best at Dartmouth.

Joe Kourafas was impressive in his first injury free meet of the season. He earned second place in both the high jump (6'4) and the long jump (20'11).

The sprinters faced a pretty fierce head wind on Sunday, but it didn't keep Lyonel Benjamin and John Johnson from continuing their impressive junior seasons. The speedy duo placed second and third in the 100 meters and second and sixth in the 200. Johnson continued his mastery of the long jump with a wind hindered 22 feet seven inches.

Paul Doyle finished 2nd in the 110 meter high hurdles and 3rd in the javelin while Marc LeFebvre continued his impressive freshman campaign by placing in both the discus and shot put.

Other top performances included Rick Copley and Kevin Greenhalgh (2nd and 4th in the steeplechase), Pat Reed (4th in the 1500 meters), and Jim Avery (800 meters).

Coach O'Brien described the meet as similar to last week's Holy Cross Classic. He went on to praise the top performers and mentioned the team refining their events as a positive from this weekend's performance.

"I thought the kids responded very well to the overall challenge," said O'Brien.

This meet was a good indication of how far we've come," O'Brien said. I'm real pleased with the progress of the team up to this point."

The team hopes to continue their impressive performances this weekend at the Brown Invitational. O'Brien has been using the invitational meets, where only individual scores are counted, to experiment moving people into different events to try to form a strategy for the upcoming conference meet.

If conditions are ideal, at Brown this weekend, O'Brien plans to put his blue chippers in their best events in hopes of qualifying them for the IC4A Championships in Williamsburg.

Baseball set to host New Hampshire at Lorden

Scorching Minutemen hope to continue winning ways

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

Outfielder Justin Howard and the rest of the Minuteman baseball team puts its three-game winning streak on the line against the University of New Hampshire today at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field. Howard is among the nation's leaders in batting.

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

It may not be time to celebrate just yet, but the new-look University of Massachusetts baseball team is starting to surge at exactly the right moment.

The University of New Hampshire Wildcats come into Amherst today at 3 p.m. to take on the Minutemen, who have won four out of their last five games and have turned their luck around.

With a new one-two pitching combination, its designated hitter and second baseman back from injury, and the team fresh off a three-game sweep, things are looking drastically better for UMass than they were a week ago.

The Minutemen (12-16) are still fighting to get over the .500 hump, but by winning three in a row against St. Bonaventure University in conference play, the team has moved from seventh place up to a tie for fifth.

With a 6-8 conference record, the team is one game out of fourth place with two A-10 weekends to go. The top four teams make the A-10 Tournament, which UMass hasn't missed since 1989. The team is tied with St. Joe's, whom they split with in the regular season, and a game behind George Washington, who has a 7-7 record.

Redshirt sophomore Jay Murphy has been implanted as the new number one starter by head coach Mike Stone, and senior Jeff Toothaker moves to the number two slot in the rotation. The hard-throwing Murphy, who has pitched solidly in back-to-back starts, will be able to complement the sidearming Toothaker, who uses a variety of speeds and release points.

The big key is injury. Both Jeff January and Mark Pileski have recovered or are rapidly recovering from injuries which have sidelined them. January was plagued with hand problems, while Pileski was nursing a thumb injury. In addition, Peter Ferrari, today's starter, is also back after spending some time on the shelf.

Ferrari, a junior right-hander, has only appeared in four games thus far. He has an 0-1 record but has only pitched seven innings. Needless to say, a strong return against the Wildcats tomorrow would go a great way in fortifying the team's starting pitching.

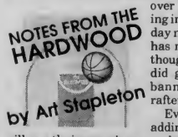
Hitting has carried the team all year, and last week was no different. Senior Steve Corradi is scorching hot and was named A-10 Player of the Week. Corradi raised his average up to .376 with a stellar 11-for-17 week, including a perfect 6-for-6 performance against Central Connecticut on Tuesday.

After moving from right field to third base, Corradi has the look of a slugger, as he belted his second home run of the season over the deepest part of the ballpark Sunday.

The best offensive player remains Justin Howard. The junior outfielder leads the team with a .420 average, 4 HR and 30 RBI. Howard also leads the team with 10 doubles and has shown no letdown in moving from left field to right field.

Between the Lines: Former St. Louis Cardinal Mike Laga was seen in the UMass dugout on Saturday. Laga was a member of the 1985 and 1987 National League Champion Cardinals, and grew up in the New England area.

Artie looks at the playoffs with help from a guest panel



"Charlotte will upset the Celtics in the first round." — Bill Walton

Now that Mr. Walton has picked the Hornets, I'll take the C's.

Welcome to the Notes from the Hardwood playoff forecast, and yes, the previous pick is true: I like Boston over the Hornets. And no, being in the Gaah-den last Tuesday night for the Bruins game has nothing to do with it. Although I sat behind a pole, I did get a chance to see the banners hanging from the rafters.

Even though they won't be adding another one, the Celtics will use their experience, and a last hurrah by both the Spleef and Kevin McHale to get by Charlotte.

Williams' record a blast from the past.

It is nice to see UMass' Mike Williams playing for the Timberwolves in the off-season. How about that? 84 consecutive free throws in a row. That broken hand must be healing well . . . what? It isn't that Mike Williams. Oh, the Mike Williams who used to be on the Indiana Pacers. My bad.

Anyway, enough on the sarcasm. Williams put Calvin Murphy's record to rest with his swish, and helped the fans realize that there is still something exciting about a foul shot. Speaking of foul shots, why does the crowd at a game make noise when a player is at the stripe?

Didn't you see the Happy Days episode when Richie Cunningham misses the easy one to win the game for Jefferson High? The gym was silent. Let's try that one sometime, but forget Mrs. C's cheer of "You can do it, Richie!"

Three cheers for the Mavericks.

Led by Jimmy Jackson's career high 32 points, the hapless Mavs beat Minnesota last Friday to avoid the worst record in NBA history. If this was another column, I'd probably pick Dallas to win it all. But, as we all know, the Cowboys had more wins that their basketball counterpart.

Barkley bumps KJ out for two.

Didn't someone on this page yesterday write "sometimes you have to take the good with the bad"? Well, the Phoenix Suns found this good-ole cliche true when, after Charles Barkley hit the hoop at the buzzer to beat Portland 115-114, he and KJ in a celebratory hug bumped knees, knocking Johnson out for two games against the Lakers.

The Suns proved why they can be beaten in the playoffs. I've heard of taking risks, but calling an out-of-bounds alley-oop to Cedric Ceballos to win the game is absurd. I know the Suns had already clinched home court, and I know that the game really meant nothing, but that is ridiculous.

Who goes to the NBA Finals?

I know my column in the fall is devoted to predictions, but I figured since everyone else would be picking teams to go to the NBA Finals, I'd let some guests get in on the action, and give the reader their choices for the NBA Championship. Here they are, on a roll:

UMass assistant basketball coach James "Bruiser" Flint: Out of the West: Phoenix Suns; Out of the East: Chicago Bulls.

UMass guard Derek Kellogg: West: Seattle Superson-

Twisters buys insurance, set for reopening

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

Twisters Tavern, a popular downtown nightspot for area college students, will be open for business on Thursday, a week after the United States Trustees Office forced the owner to close due to lack of adequate insurance.

The U.S. Trustees office, notably David Noonan of Springfield, has been working with Twisters in it's financial restructure.

"We have to follow guidelines set by the Trustees Office, and they said it was in the best interest to have full liability insurance coverage, before reopening," said Twisters' Owner Mark Forsythe.

The decision to close Twisters came on Friday at 3 p.m., a few hours before it was set to open for the busy weekend.

"The decision to close Twisters came out of left field, I didn't expect it to happen," said Forsythe, who was out of town at the time. "It was impossible to get it together in time to open for the weekend."

Forsythe said it takes a few days for the insurance to begin coverage. Twisters had basic liability, meaning it was covered by any accidents or injuries, occurring to patron or employees, while on the premises.

The new insurance gives Twisters liquor liability, protecting them, if a patron was to leave intoxicated and cause an accident.

"It seems to keep Twisters open is a win-win situation for everyone involved," said Forsythe, alluding to the college students and the staff.

Twisters currently employs about 25 students, who attend either the UMass or Amherst College.

Forsythe said he is still negotiating the sale of Twisters to the Apache River Corporation, which

Ambassador urges India to remain a secular state

Ambassador Kanwal Sibal

The Indian Ambassador to the United States said India must remain a secular state if it is to cope with the sectarian strife between members of the nation's Hindu and Muslim religions, at the Campus Center last night.

Ambassador Kanwal Sibal said because Indians are all of the same race, "ethnic strife" does not exist in India. He said Americans have confused ethnic strife with communal strife.

"There is currently sectarian strife in India," he said. "But there is no ethnic strife because the reasons for the tensions between Hindus and Muslims have nothing to do with radial identity."

Sibal traced the history of the partition between Muslims and Hindus in India back to England's policy of divide and conquer. He said partitioning was an expedient way of establishing separate identities for Hindus and Muslims and to prevent any type of coalition from forming.

Sibal said the partitioning of India, which has left India with a population 120 million Muslims in a country made up mostly of Hindus has created a unique problem for India.

"There is no other case where such a sizable Muslim community exists in a secular state," Sibal said. "And there is no other case where the Muslims are not governing themselves. This has made the cohabitation with Hindus difficult."

Sibal said the Indian government has made an effort to help the Muslim population participate in government.

"The Indian government has made a conscious attempt to accomodate minority leaders," he said. "We have had two Muslim presidents. I think by any yardstick this is an accomplishment. Some people try to put this off as window dressing, but name one state in the world that has made a minority its president."

Sibal also discussed the significance of the Babri Masjid, a Muslim mosque that was destroyed by Hindu extremists who claimed the mosque was built on the site of an ancient Hindu temple. The Muslims reacted by destroying several Hindu temples. He said the Indian government reacted by taking steps against both Hindus and Muslims.

"The Indian government reacted by banning five organizations, three Hindu and two Muslim," Sibal said. "The Indian government will go to any length to protect its secular status."

Sibal said neither India's sectarian strife nor its economic problems will be solved unless the entire country agrees about the importance of a secular state.

"Everyone must be committed to maintaing our secular policy, the problem cannot be solved by isolating specific groups," he said. "Right now India's number one problem is its economy. Once its economic problems are solved, many of its other problems will become more manageable."

Nader will speak to UM

Ralph Nader, the well-known consumer advocate and political activist, will be speaking on community service, specifically as it relates to President Clinton's proposed national service program, tonight at 7 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts.

Nader plans to discuss the current debate over community service and offer suggestions for the future.

Author of numerous books and articles, Nader's credits include Who's Poisoning America?, Unsafe at Any Speed and Canada First.

In his appearance at the University last year, Nader addressed "Electoral Empowerment," and his candidacy in the Massachusetts Presidential primary.

Nadar also mentioned his ariticle he wrote last year, "The Concord Principles: An Agenda for a New Initiated Deamocracy," which outlined a plan he said would "return the American political system to its democratic roots."

The event is sponsored by the Commuter Area Government, the Student Graduate Association, UMass Community Service Program and the Graduate Student Senate.

Kochiyama working for civil liberties

By CARA LEE BIRCH
Collegian Staff

Yuri Kochiyama, an Asian-American political activist, who has worked with great leaders such as Malcolm X, will be speaking at the University of Massachusetts on Friday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Students will have the honor of hearing her give a lecture titled, "The Road to Unity: Learning About Ourselves, Learning About Others, Learning About History."

NEWS ANALYSIS

In 1941, at the young age of 20, Kochiyama spent two and one-half years in the Japanese-American concentration camps, in which her father died. Several years later, in 1944, she met Bill Kochiyama, a member of the All-Japanese American 442nd Regimental Combat Team who "distinguished themselves fighting in Europe." Resisting the inequities of a country embedded with racism, they have shared a life with six children and continue to dedicate themselves to their extended family and friends, based in Harlem.

In 1946, Kochiyama became heavily involved with the local community. Later, when Kochiyama, her husband, and their children moved to Harlem, she found herself at a turning point.

She began her political work in 1963 by joining the Harlem Parents Committee, and enrolling the whole family in the Harlem Freedom School. Later, as her daughter Aichi describes, "In 1963, beginning with an extraordinary meeting with Malcolm X in a Brooklyn courtroom, a profound transformation began to take shape. She steadily attended Malcolm's lectures at the Audubon ballroom, bringing along her three oldest children, ages 11 to 16. Through his teaching and analysis, her own view of the world became sharpened into a political, revolutionary perspective."

Yuri, influenced by Malcolm, tells of the connections between peoples:

"In June of 1964, Malcolm came to our apartment to meet with some Hibakusha (survivors of the United States atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki) writers of the Hiroshima/Nagasaki World Peace Study Mission. . . On learning that the Hibakushas had just gone to the World's Worst Fair in Harlem, Malcolm thanked them for choosing to come to the real-life fair, instead of the well-publicized, commercial World's Fair in Flushing Meadow. The Hibakushas saw what life in some parts of Harlem is like: garbage piled up, because the city was not picking it up regularly; windows and stairwells broken and unrepaired; toilets that would not flush; bathtubs that were clogged. He told the Hibakushas: 'You were bombed and have physical scars. We also have been bombed and you saw some of the scars in our neighborhood. We are constantly hit by the bombs of racism — which are just as devastating.'"

Aichi goes on to elaborate

Town residents may decrease PVTA funding

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The 234th Annual Town Meeting began Monday in Amherst, with two warrants on the agenda which could greatly impact University of Massachusetts students.

Article 14 asks the town, if it should continue paying a share of the free bus system in Amherst.

The routes, which would be affected, if Town Meeting decides to reject further financial support are Orchard Valley and Bay Road, Cushman and Echo Hill.

This article may come up for vote tonight as the Town Meeting resumes at the Amherst Regional Junior High School Auditorium.

The bus system consists of 40 buses and transports approximately three million passengers every year. The operating cost to run the bus system is $2 million a year.

Forty-eight percent of the system is subsidized by a $15 per year fee charged to UMass students, plus University parking fees.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts contributes approximately 33 percent in aid, and federal grants amount to 17 percent.

The town of Amherst and a local realtor contribute the other two percent of the UMass transit's operating budget.

A report made available by the Public Transportation Committee to residents of Amherst said, "the town pays 48 percent of the two percent and the remaining 52 percent of the joint contribution is a donation by local realtor D.H. Jones."

"The annual cost of the bus system for the town is estimated at between approximately $60 and $70,000 a year," Select Board Member Carolyn Holstein said.

The Public Transportation Committee recommended that the Town Meeting members continue to support the bus system, hoping to alleviate traffic congestion and keep the outlying real estate economically viable to prospective buyers and renters.

"For some using the bus is not a matter of choice," stated the report. "Among those who use the system are the elderly, international students, low income residents in outlying areas and Amherst public school children."

The committee also said, "If the town now withdraws support it will be impossible for the town to recover the state and federal aid, when a decision is made to reinstate the service."

Amherst Town Meeting consists of approximately 250 elected members. While only members may make motions and vote at the meetings, all of Amherst's registered voters may participate in debate and address the meeting.

Article 28, petitioned by Amherst resident and Town Meeting member Larry Kelley, proposes the town pursue $203,000 he says UMass owes the town in traffic fines.

Kelley said he believed the State's Chief Justice had decided "any motor vehicle offense charged as a violation of state or municipal law on university that is within the boundaries of the Town of Amherst," and should result in "all assessments for violations of civil motor vehicle infractions must being paid over to the treasury of the city or town wherein the offense was committed."

Kelley said he would like to hire legal counsel to resolve this matter as soon as possible.

"To allow the Attorney General to decide this case could take six months to one year," he said. He concluded, "Time is money and we need that money now!"

Article 28 will not come to vote until sometime next week. Town Meeting is scheduled to continue tomorrow night and then will resume on Monday night with meetings next Wednesday and Thursday.

Stretching to soothe the mind

Gym uses yoga and Pilates to strengthen muscles

By TROY L. MERRICK
Collegian Staff

Above the hustle and bustle in the shops of Thorne's Market in Northampton is a place to do something college students here at UMass don't always get to do — relax.

Almost hidden behind the quaint scenery of the rest of the top floor of Thornes is a quiet, peaceful serene room.

This haven is called Your Own Gym, and its goal is to enable people to freshen their minds and bodies together with a series of special workouts.

Your Own Gym concentrates on stretching exercises easing tension, purifing the mind, and giving more energy and grace to the way people move.

"When I came here, I had to what was known as 'frozen shoulders,'" said Marty Benjamin, an instructor at the gym since 1985. "I couldn't lift my arms because of the work I was doing as a mechanic. After a month of doing the routines here, I noticed a full 360-degree change, and not only were my arms and shoulders better, but so was my entire body."

The exercises at Your Own Gym are based on the Pilates Method, started by Joseph Pilates, who came to the United States from Germany in the 1920s. His work was designed to integrate the regions of the body, concentrating most on the spine, to make movements more centered, and thus more powerful and smooth.

"Pilates is an exercise system that strengthens the inner pelvic, abdominal and thoracic muscles," Benjamin said.

The gym has a variety of stations, simple machines that might make the layperson confused as to what they are intended for.

The exercises are renowned for producing lean, lithe physiques and is used heavily by dancers, skaters, sports figures like the Cincinnati Bengals professional football team, and assorted actors and actresses such as Louis Gossett Jr., Gregory Peck, Sigourney Weaver and Katherine Hepburn.

"I found I didn't need the muscle that I got from regular weight training," said Bob Hannun, a former teacher at the gym. "This place builds your body by reaching into a deeper set of muscles, lengthening and stretching your body but still keeping it strong and in fact making it stronger."

The gym helps people suffering from aches and pains from the sedentary, "desk job" life that not only can lead to heart disease, but is detrimental to bones, muscles and joints.

"People are in such pain that they needed the gym, which makes it possible for them to just walk around," said Joan Cocks, a professor at Mt. Holyoke College.

She said she came to Your Own Gym with a back injury from karate and of too many hours of sitting behind a desk.

The motions of the gym incorporate yoga and stress the need for movements to be performed as precisely as possible. They can be used as a safeguard against injury, and is versatile from person to person so exercises are not boring and repetitive. Most of all, they give vigor to every movement a person makes, whether in exercise or during daily activities.

"This is the first way I have found of strengthening and exercising my body... that has not felt abusive or relentless," said El Lash, a Smith College sophomore. "Pilates helps me reclaim my body and feel good about it."

Students teach health issues to campus peers

Editor's note: This is the second in a two-part series on the peer health educators.

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

The peer health education program has undergone major changes in structure in the past year, according to Pam Gonyer, the director of health education.

Instead of having two separate classes, the program has been combined to give students training in all areas of health awareness including, alcohol and drug abuse, sexually transmitted diseases, HIV/AIDS awareness, stress management and eating disorders.

"The reason we changed the organization is because we strongly believe health issues are integrated," Gonyer said. "We need to think of all the issues together and bring them together."

Myra Edelstein, a health educator at University Health Services and the new director of the program, said the program is a year-long course for undergraduate students.

Edelstein said the first semester focuses on learning and studying the issues pertinent to college students. She said the second semester trains the students in small group communication, facilitation skills and health education methodologies.

"The students put theory into practice," Edelstein said.

Edelstein said students reach the campus in a variety of ways. Peer educators deliver workshops, coordinate campus center tables and create a variety of printed materials to distribute to the campus.

"The primary focus of peer education is to deliver health education information to our student community," Edelstein said.

Presently the peer health education workshops include "How to Be a Better Lover: a workshop discussing sexuality and contraception," "Bedspins: a discussion of alcohol and sex," and "Stress: a relaxation and time management workshop."

Students in the second semester of the course are hard at work with projects to reach out to the campus community. Projects include Campus Center tables, the designing of new workshop protocols and development of signs and bulletin board kits.

Tables on the concourse involve free "stuff" for students. A recent HIV/AIDS awareness table gave away red ribbons, condoms and Gold Circle Coin condom earrings. Other tables have been set up to raise awareness about seatbelt use, skin cancer and safer sex practices.

"The people who come into this class change dramatically, their attitudes are totally different," Deirdre Scott, one of the teachers of the course, said.

"Students have time to focus with reflection and self-examination on their own personal health decisions and concerns," Scott said.

The course teaches students facilitation skills, and is a recommended course for education majors, according to Jane Sibley, curriculum coordinator for the School of Education.

"The class refines skills as educators," Gonyer said. "Students practice by doing it."

Gretchen Krull, former director of the peer sex educators, said the course is unique to the University and draws students in even after their year-long class is over. She said many of her students stayed on in independent studies for extra semesters.

Krull said the students she worked with were committed, and she developed many close working relationships.

To become involved in the program, students can call University Health Services.

Tearing the rusty hinges off the door to the dark closet

They came by the thousands: men, women, children, parents, students, friends — straight and gay alike. They marched proudly among pink triangles, red AIDS ribbons and rainbow banners — and they marched together. "This is our day!" And so, on Sunday, April 25, 1993, the closet door opened, with a long awaited loud and exhilarating crash against the fortress walls of American society.

"It's the end of 12 years of darkness," remarked a gay White House official. Indeed, this demonstration didn't only give gay Americans a progressive political soapbox, it gave them public legitimacy — it gave them a face.

"Hey, hey! Ho, ho! Jesse Helms has got to go!"

The radical religious right will tell you this face is a reflection of the devil and fags will burn in hell. As seen in Colorado, gays don't deserve protection of the rights guaranteed them as citizens of the United States of America. These groups have been using the homosexuality issue as a means for furthering their agenda. American society is famous for turning the "abnormal" into the evil. In God's eyes, those that stray will pay. Thus the religious right are gaining a fast-growing support, by spreading their ignorance and feeding America's fear.

"Act up! Fight back! Fight AIDS!"

Most disturbing is their claim, "Fags equal AIDS." If that in itself doesn't prove their ignorance, I'm not sure what will. What they and their followers forget is that we are talking about normal, everyday people. And normal, everyday people are contracting AIDS. Losing sight of this unquestionable fact is not only dangerous, it is simply terrifying. Projecting a nation's health crisis onto one group of people is by no means a solution.

E.C.

"Ho, ho! Hey, hey! We are on the P.T.A.!"

Opening the closet door doesn't always mean seeing the light, nor does it mean the days will be brighter than those spent alone, locked behind a facade. Acceptance from family and friends is not always included in the travel package. But on Sunday, parents and friends appeared with smiles of pride — pride in what their sons, daughters, friends were. Eager to stand beside them in their fight against discrimination and for acceptance. Happy that walking a few miles could represent years of unequivocal love and joy.

"We're here! We're queer! We won't go away!"

Being gay doesn't make you less of a child, of a friend, of a co-worker — less of a person. Trying to wipe out an identity through legislation, speeches or hate crimes won't make them go away, and it won't cure AIDS. These people are just that — people, with real faces, real feelings and real voices that deserve to be heard. No longer should they be forced to silently scream through a steel door.

"Hey, hey! Ho, ho! Homophobia's got to go!"

Disagreeing with someone's lifestyle because it's different from yours doesn't warrant persecution of that person. You may not agree with their choice, which is fine and doesn't necessarily mean you're ignorant; but if you can't respect that choice, then you're playing into the hands of ignorance.

If the march on Washington does nothing less than show America that gays exist as ordinary human beings, than it hasn't just accomplished opening the closet — it has opened a doorway and a window.

Dropping off the world

"That looks so cool," said Eustacia Fields from her reclining position in a wicker chair. The music continued to pour from the speakers in the smoke-filled and dimly lit room as people milled around randomly.

"What the hell are you talking about?" shouted Kent O'Brien stumbling over, holding a beer. "That's nothin' but a damn candle."

Nathan
CRICK

"I know man, isn't it awesome?" she smiled as a grin crept over her face. "Just look at it for a second there Kent my boy. It's all there."

"Aw hell, you're all screwed up," he shouted, taking a sip from his bottle. "Like a damn. . . well a damn somethin'. You know, that thing that people are called. . .it starts with some kind of letter. . ."

"Yeah, have another drink Kent buddy," Eustacia giggled wildly. "Aw man, I need some popcorn."

"Popcorn! We need some damn popcorn over here!" burst out Kent while waving his beer around in the air. "Communists," he cursed when nobody listened to him.

"You know Kent buddy, I think if they were. . .um . ." she drifted off while glancing at the candle across the room.

Kent looked down at her. "Communists."

"Yeah. . .Communists. That they would've given you some of that popcorn. You know, as communal property and stuff. Like stamps."

"Communists Shmommunists," mumbled Kent taking a drink. "And what does stamps have to do with anything?" he demanded suddenly.

Eustacia doubled over laughing. "You know. . .stamps. Everybody owns stamps. .. like the post office and stuff. . ."

"What are you talking about?" Kent laughed. "Communism is just a front for a dictatorship in the name of the people! There's no popcorn in communism, there's not even butter! No butter, no corn, no popcorn! Just Stalin and that bald dude. Buried us. That guy."

Eustacia managed to catch her breath. "But Kent, that's not real communism. That was just distorted stuff with lots of tanks," she paused. "You'd look funny bald."

"You have too much faith in the people Eustacia. Communism didn't work because people stink. We all stink," he scowled, taking a drink. "And I'm not going bald."

"Oh don't get all upset Kent buddy, this is a party! You always get all upset about things. Just roll with it man. . ." she said, holding her arms out and pretending she was riding a motorcycle. "Pick up a communist and roll."

"Only if you pick up a fascist."

"Fascist Shmasfismm....whatever," she giggled. "Who cares."

"I'd just run 'em over. They both cause the same problems anyway. I'd just take 'em to Tallahasse bridge and put 'em in a bag and dump 'em all."

"You'd be dumping half Congress."

"I'd be dumping everyone," he said, taking another drink. "You know, that's how I think the world was formed. The gods stuck the Earth under the Tallahasse bridge and dumped over all the communists and fascists onto it. And now we're stuck with no more bridges left. No bridges dammit!" he shouted and drained his beer. "Just a lot of people thinking they're smart. Well, I'll tell ya. They're ALL fascists. They're ALL communists. All of 'em."

"Man, you gotta get drunk more, Kent. You make a lot more sense when you slur everything."

"Sense is relative," he paused. "I need another beer."

"Just watch the candle, Kent. The truth's all there."

"Yeah, I suppose," he chuckled. "Too bad we can't see through the haze. I can hardly even focus anymore."

King trial: time for changes

The recent conviction of two of the four police officers charged with violating the civil rights of Rodney King should not be seen as an indictment of all who wear the badge. Yet neither does it mean that the savagery of police brutality has finally been revealed and can now join the ash heap of history. Two concrete steps could dramatically improve the deteriorating quality of life in our cities where 58 percent of all African-Americans and 25 percent of all Hispanics reside. But both changes must contend with long-standing forces.

First, consider as economist Sean Gervasi recently pointed out, Blacks earn on average only 60 percent of what Whites earn. Other minorities labor under similar inequities. Add to this injustice the fact that federal support for cities (housing aid, employment and training and revenue-sharing) has dropped $48 billion to $23 billion in 1993. Here we glimpse the statistical contours of unaddressed human misery; and Gervasi argues that a serious commitment to our cities would cost $100 billion. Today we spend close to three times that on the military. Thus our cities are condemned to totter on the edge of cataclysm. Yet where is the groundswell that cries out as the Senate cannot even approve a $14 billion economic stimulus bill?

Second, until our cities widely adopt civilian review boards to investigate allegations of police brutality — rather than allowing the police to review their own, as is now the case — the victim of excessive force faces a steep slope in securing justice and damages. We should not tolerate one set of standards for police wrongdoing and a far harsher one for civilians who misbehave. To allow such blatant unfairness is to make a mockery of our solemn pledge of "liberty and justice for all."

An aroused citizenry should push for these changes while the issues are fresh. Federal outlays to our cities and the adoption of civilian review boards for our police departments could begin providing much-needed hope. Until then, the haunting words of Frederick Douglass, an ex-slave speaking in 1852, will remain as relevant today: "The rich inheritance of justice, liberty, prosperity and independence, bequeathed by your fathers, is shared by you, not by me." And our cities will remain tinder boxes facing the fire this time.

Library shuttle helps the Hill

Many a night I have been in the Tower Library and called the escort service for a ride, only to be told that there is a very long wait. The options then were to wait or to walk up to Orchard Hill alone and in the dark. Now that problem is in the past, because of the new library shuttle.

The shuttle stops at the library twice every hour, Sunday through Thursday nights, and follows the Orchard Hill Loop One bus route. It is not only for library users, but also Orchard Hill bus users along the route. You can take the shuttle from your dorm to the library. Now the escort service can reduce its number of trips to the library, so that there are more vans available for other destinations, and library users do not have to worry about waiting for an escort. Shuttle schedules are available in the library.

T-shirts insult Calvin's freedom

I have seen T-shirts on the UMass and other college campuses featuring Calvin and Hobbes and beer. Hobbes holds a funnel with Calvin under the plea, "I've funneled and I can't get up!" Calvin and Hobbes tap a keg beneath a caption admonishing, "Friends don't let friends beer goggle."

An inebriated 6-year-old and his stuffed tiger is disgraceful, but a minor issue. Associating Calvin's character with being drunk is more disturbing.

Calvin's appeal stems from his fabulous imagination. He confects worlds and characters at whim, and authority figures are pieces for his game. He is indifferent, not disrespectful, to authority, and so is particularly frustrating to those who would control him. Calvin has endless power, and thus limitless freedom. Imagine turning the viscous university administration to slime beings, and frying them at will from Spiff's spaceship. Take that, financial aid! What pleasure. What power. What freedom! Wearers associate drunkenness with Calvin's creativity: "Look at how wild and crazy we are, just like Calvin and Hobbes." I don't think I'm reading too much into this; I have yet to see Archie too drunk to stand.

Calvin has worlds at his disposal. Why would he resort to so pedestrian an activity as getting drunk? The parody on the shirts is a gross perversion of his freedom. Comparing Calvin's sort of pure imagination with being drunk for a good time (or not needing to but doing it anyway) is a mockery. Lining up at another keg at another party lacks imagination and resource, and seems regimented and strict compared to Calvin's constant war on the mundane.

I hypothesize that Calvin will drink beer in college, if he gets that far. Who knows, maybe he'll seduce Susie (or she'll seduce him) over a few rounds, but then he'll lose much of his charm. Calvin's boundless freedom is insulted by comparison with the rituals of drinking and being drunk.

Multicultural Affairs

Wacko Yankeeland: Koresh, Clinton, and Culture

Editors Note: This article is a collective contribution from various members of the Multicultural Affairs staff.

As springtime approaches and the revelry begins in the Yankeeland, we sit back and admire the procession of wannabe chancellors parading through our crumbling campus. Time once again to reflect on America.

Twenty minutes drive from campus, one finds in the center of "historic Deerfield" a small dirt mound on which is perched a monument. Etched in stone at its base are the words, "This monument stands upon the old meetinghouse hill and is within the limits of the old fort, built AD 1689 and which remained until AD 1758 and was one of the chief defenses of the early settlers against the attacks of the savage Indians. With pious affection and gratitude their decedents would hereby associate the sacrifices and sufferings of the fathers of the town in establishing our institutions, with those of their children defending them. 'Aye, call it holy ground the spot where first they trod! They have left unstained what here they found, Freedom to worship God."

Savagery indeed. The Pioneer Valley revelled in sending Mount Holyoke Professor Anthony Lake to Washington as National Security Advisor to follow the great tradition of slaughter and genocide commemorated on that mound. The only "savage Indians" to be seen in the Valley since those days of glory (Jeff Amherst and his smallpox blankets, etc.) are on logos for Shawmut Bank and, disgracefully, UMass itself. Savagery indeed.

Not that the Valley Yankeeland is the exception in America. It is typical. It is the most typical in its gushing hypocrisy of "liberalism" and "multiculturalism." Witness, for example the spectacle in Washington of the dedication of a national Holocaust Museum in the capital of a state that, because of deep-seated American anti-Semitism, turned away countless thousands of European Jews fleeing for their lives from the most evil oppression.

America stood idly by as millions of Jews, Gypsies and others were ruthlessly slaughtered. And then "liberated" the camps only as something of an afterthought in the process of conquering Germany. No amount of pious posturing and posing can alleviate all centers of western culture, including the United States, from their tremendous burden of guilt for such barbarity.

If America were sincere in its desire to confront the dark side of its civilization and culture, it would not stop at or focus on crimes whose guilt resides primarily in Germany, Poland and other Christian European nations. Rather, it would continue the enterprise, examining its own appalling history of racism, genocide and crimes against humanity.

For example, the seat of American arrogance, the White House, should be turned into a national museum of slavery, segregation, and other forms of racism directed against African-Americans.

The Capitol building, currently housing the U.S. Congress, should be at once turned into a national museum chronicling the numerous atrocities committed by U.S. troops in East Asia, particularly in Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and Korea. We can suggest the "Mai Lai Museum" as a fitting new title for that white-domed edifice.

Further, the central office of the U.S. Treasury Department would be appropriately converted into a "Hiroshima Memorial," commemorating the incineration of hundreds of thousands of Japanese civilians in American nuclear assault. Also, all its assets should be sold to Japan in a desperate effort to reduce the budget deficit.

Justice demands that the World Trade Center be turned into a museum dedicated to the victims of American terrorism in the Middle East. How appropriate it would be for the U.S. financial center to be dedicated to those who died as a result of American lust for oil and money, such as the hundreds of Iranian airline passengers shot out of the sky by a U.S. warship, or the hundreds of Iraqi women and children roasted alive by U.S. cruise missiles deliberately targeted on their air raid shelter during the Gulf War.

Finally, the smug and sneering visages carved into the rockface of Mount Rushmore are in dire need of a Beverly Hills style facelift. This monumental plastic surgery should leave us with the faces of those who are more deserving of respect in international eyes: Ayatollah Khomeini, Saddam Hussein, Fidel Castro, and Muamar Qaddafi. Now that's a monument worth seeing.

Having made these multicultural suggestions for improving some important American landmarks, we can think of more U.S. icons and symbols that would have to be re-interpreted in a spirit of true introspection and repentance. Bearing in the mind the callous and anti-Semitic rejection of European Jewish refugees in the 1930s, the promises on the Statue of Liberty ring so hollow that they demand a metamorphosis of the statue itself.

This towering hypocrisy is most blatantly revealed in the "inclusive" Clinton regime's outrageous attempts to stop Haitians from entering the United States, going so far as to send an armada of warships to cage Haitians in their island, and create a leper colony/concentration camps in Guantanamo Bay. So much for "Give me your poor, tired, hungry," etc. The invitation of the rusty green lady is as hollow as the promises of equality in the Declaration of Independence.

Clearly, the flag of the United States of America also cries out for modernization. Fast food culture demands fast food imagery. The "Stars and Stripes" must become, with slight modification, the "Burgers and Fries." The stars will each be replaced with a juicy burger (with special sauce) on a sesame seed bun. The stripes will consist of french fries laced with streaks of ketchup. In a similar vein, the national anthem should now begin "Oh say can you see, through your night vision goggles," and end with "O'er the land of the free-falling dollar, and the home of the burger."(Readers are encouraged to also work on revising the rest of the text along similar multicultural lines.) Indeed, this new MacAnthem must be called "the Star-Spangled Burger."

As school children in Yankeeland enjoy the Disney-produced racist and anti-Semitic attack on Arabs called "Aladdin," we offer a few constructive and truly educational multicultural nursery rhymes for children to recite. For example:

Bubba white sheep,
Have you any cash?
No sir, no sir
Our banks have crashed.
Some went to China,
Some went to Japan,
and some went to the little guy sitting in Baghdad.

or

Georgie Bushi, pudding and pie.
Bombed Iraqis and made them die.
When the Serbs came out to play,
Georgie Bushi ran away.

But Yankeeland is not all such Sesame Street fun. The spirit of the fanatical, fundamentalist, Puritan Christian conquistadors lingers on, as demonstrated so graphically by the American intra-ethnic religious warfare in Waco, Texas.

This conflict, between the Reverend David Koresh and lay preacher Bill, as forces on one Christian sect stormed its rival's stronghold with tanks. The Clinton crusade against Koresh's rival Christian group calls to mind nothing less than the incinerations of the Inquisition, all in the name of "Jesus H. Christ."

As a tolerant and multicultural alternative to this kind of fundamentalist, totalitarianism, we offer a vehicle of healing. Let us come together and join hands for a candlelight vigil. Let us together, in harmony, recite this, the multicultural prayer:

Our father Billary, who aren't in Washington,
Hollow be thy brain.
The Japanese come,
Thy "Bill" be done,
In Waco, as in the World Trade Center.
Give us this day our daily crack,
And forgive our debts,
before Asians buy our houses.
Lead us not into Bosnia,
But deliver us from Saddam.
Omen.

Attica prison remembered through film

Earlier this month, 450 prisoners in the maximum security prison at Lucasville seized control of cellblock L to protest their living conditions. The Ohio prisoners believed that taking hostages and seizing the prison was the only way that their demands would be listened to.

The prison rebellion in Ohio ended after 10 days, without the bloody massacre that ended the Attica prison rebellion in 1971. Twenty years ago, inmates at Attica prison took hostages, seized the central yard in the prison, and made a series of demands for better conditions. After five days, the state police mowed them down, murdering 32 prisoners and killing ten hostages in the process.

The prisoners at Attica demanded and received media coverage for their demonstration. They won the battle for public opinion, but lost militarily. The lessons of Attica were not lost, however, on either the Ohio prisoners or their captors outside the prison. Access to the media became a principal demand of the Ohio inmates so that they could air their demands to the public and to insure that they would not be massacred like the inmates at Attica.

To commemorate the Attica prison uprising and to educate the UMass community about prisons, the Maoist Internationalist Movement and the Office of Third World Affairs will be showing the film Attica on Thursday, April 29 at 7 p.m. in Thompson 106. The film will also be shown at Hampshire College tonight at 7 p.m. in ASH lecture hall.

Following each showing of the film there will be a short discussion on ,prison conditions and the recent prison rebellion in Ohio.

Diversity staff endorses GSS slate

Editor's note: Shyamala Ivatury is a frequent contributor to the Collegian. She is not a staff member, as the Collegian constitution does not allow for graduate students or officers in governmental bodies to hold staff status.

While some of us in the ALANA and allied communites are celebrating the election of Dave Nunez as Student Government President and Al Lizana as Student Trustee, we cannot forget that the real task of fighting tuition and fee increases, ensuring a safe educational enviornment, and creating a governing body that is representative of all students on campus is still ahead for our student leaders.

We are certain that Al and Dave will do their best to improve conditions for the students at UMass and work on behalf of the interests of undergraduates.

The Graduate Student Senate is the twin sister organization to the SGA. The GSS represents the interests of graduate students and work around similar issues. In recent years, the bond between graduate and undergraduate students have grown weaker and dimmer. But with the election of Al Lizana as student trustee, graduate students came out in full force to endorse a candidate committed to minority rights and representation and multiculturalism.

This bold statement made by graduate students has had a great impact on the undergraduate community and says to us: We have a common bond and share a common struggle. This is why we, the staff of the Multicultural Affairs Page, have chosen to endorse the woman of color running for GSS president, Shyamala Ivatury. We feel that as a staff committed to representing the interests of students of color and being one of the most persistent advocators for diversity, it is important to support another individual committed to the same principles.

Shyamala Ivatury is running for president on a slate with Julia Mahoney, Julia Johnson, and Darren Schaffer. After speaking with Ms. Ivatury about her campaign, we feel Shyamala and her running mates are honestly committed to the well-being of all the 25,000 students on this campus. These graduate students, with the leadership of Ms. Ivatury, plan to work hard for child care, litigation powers in legal services, improvement in health care, and fight against tuition and housing fee increases.

Ms. Ivatury is currently serving as the GSS treasurer, which has provided her with the necessary knowledge of UMass administrative bureaucracy. She has served on various committees including the Council on the Status of Minorities, Status of Women's Council, and the GLBC task force. Shyamala has been an ardent advocator for scholarships for low-income women and more graduate represenatation on departmental committees to get faculty. Shyamala is also a strong supporter of the Graduate Employees Organization and sat on the coordinating committee last summer.

Often as undergraduates we overlook the importance of graduate students, but without them, the individual attention, patience and education we deserve would be lacking, especially in classes with over 50 students. As the number of students increase in each class, teaching assistants are crucial in our educational development. However, when TAs are overworked, underpaid and neglected, their job performance naturally declines. It is important for undergraduates to pay close attention to the issues concerning graduate students.

Understanding the important relationship between graduate and undergraduate students, the staff the Multicultural Affairs Page wholeheardtly supports Shyamala Ivatury and her running mates in their campaign to win the GSS elections. We feel that, given the pool of candidates, Shyamala is the most qualified and will provide this institution with what it needs: new alternatives for a flourishing university.

Arts & Living

A solid, stirring This Boy's Life

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Hollywood, in its infinite wisdom, has trouble adapting foreign films (Point of No Return, The Vanishing) and even their own (Night & the City, Born Yesterday), so it's always a prickly situation when an acclaimed novel makes its way to the big screen. Can you say Bonfire of the Vanities?

The above logic doesn't hold true for the most part with This Boy's Life, a solid and affecting screen adaptation of Tobias Wolff's superb memoir. British director Michael Caton-Jones (Memphis Belle, Doc Hollywood) takes a few liberties here and there, but ultimately it shows that both he and screenwriter Robert Getchell (Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore) have a deep respect for their source material.

Life tells the story of a young teen, Toby (Leonardo DiCaprio), whose free-wheeling mother (Ellen Barkin) marries a bully of many sorts named Dwight (Robert DeNiro) in late '50s Washington. In a Pacific Northwest town called Concrete, Dwight and Toby go toe-to-toe in a struggle for the boy's identity, his very spirit. Dwight makes Toby join the Scouts, start a paper route (but Dwight keeps the money), play basketball in dress shoes and generally thrusts his face into Toby's life.

Yet Toby is resilient, for as much as he despises Dwight, he loves his mother and does want to make something out of himself. He is a juvenile delinquent mainly, because there's nothing else to do in Concrete, and Toby wants out. And whatever he strives for, Dwight is there to knock him down (figuratively and literally).

DiCaprio, whose biggest credit was a one-season stint on "Growing Pains" as a homeless boy whom the Seavers "adopt," turns in a brave and wonderfully sublime performance. Full of hope and angst, DiCaprio eschews all the fake and modulated mannerisms teen actors usually fall into. DiCaprio makes Toby a haunting, complex (and faulted) hero.

DiCaprio holds his own against DeNiro, who like his character, must be in command of every scene. Dwight is a control freak and overgrown kid with a buzz cut, mercilessly trying to break Toby with every snide comment, yelling with bratty glee "shut your goddamn pie hole" to every objection.

Ellen Barkin, as Toby's mom Caroline, turns in a sound performance in a tough role. It's easy to see why she's attracted to Dwight in the beginning. It's not his forced, cartoonish charm, but his stability that Caroline is taken in by. Barkin's best in the later scenes, when she realizes she's made a terrible mistake, but she stays with Dwight, telling Toby to focus on the good and not the bad.

Yet despite the presence of DeNiro and Barkin, it remains DiCaprio's film. He excels in a handful of scenes with a gay friend named Arthur (Jonah Blechman, in a marvelous performance), who has a crush on Toby, there's a charged glow between the two actors that's beautifully resonant.

Wolff purists and die-hard fans of the book will no doubt be disappointed by Life. The film is more of an excerpt from the memoir than an adaptation, as sequences are added (there's an uncomfortable honeymoon sex scene between DeNiro and Barkin that isn't in the book) and deleted to fit the director's vision. Yet, it's one of the better adaptations from

Thrillers reign on HSCN

By EDWARD W. HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

Well as the old saying goes: April showers bring May flowers and never more so than in the coming weeks on HSCN. Although the HSCN stratosphere seems steeped in downpours of B movies this week, better cinema is in bloom for next week with a slew of critical favorites, including the Civil War drama Glory and the classic analysis of suspense Marathon Man. However, not everything harbors severe storm warnings. This week with several engaging films like the little-seen Gas, Food, Lodging (starring Ione Skye and Fairuza Balk) deftly avoiding Man Trouble (the ads screamed "Jack is back!"... Yeah, in the wrong damn movie).

April Fools Day — Schlock horror-meister Sean Cunningham just never seems to get it right. His attempt at milking the Halloween cash cow with the abysmal Friday the 13th only resulted in numerous gore-splattered sequels. His efforts in the underwater monster movie tank with Deep Star Six left him grasping for air. And now, this move into horror comedy just reinforces the expression "don't quit your day job." This movie is a monstrous mess, involving a group of friends who assemble on a secluded island only to find themselves stalked by a mysterious slasher. Cunningham's attempts at horror parody suffer from lack of one main necessity, there isn't a witty or funny bone in this entire cinematic corpse. F

The Hitcher — Rutger Hauer has always seemed menacing even in his rare stints as a good guy (Blind Fury) and he exploits this characteristic to the fullest in this suspense-rigged tale of a lone driver's run-in with a psychopath on a desolate expanse of desert highway. Hauer does the psycho role dutifully and inspires some real white-knuckle thrills despite the abundance of plotholes. Credible performances by Hauer, Jennifer Jason Leigh and C. Thomas Howell as the beleaguered traveler elevate this film above the standard slasher trappings and leave it playing like a mixed marriage of Steven Spielberg's Duel and a nightmarish version of "The Fugitive." C+

Highlander — Having inspired a syndicated television show and a ridiculous sequel owing nothing to the original, this action "sleeper" from 1986 has become sort of a cult classic, but I really don't see what there is here to lose one's head over. Director Russell MucCahy (Ricochet) fuses action and fantasy genres with mixed results, telling a sometimes cliched yet for the most part engaging tale of immortal warriors locked in centuries-spanning combat. Lead Christopher Lambert leaves his Greystoke roots behind and makes a suitable action hero (though the antiquities dealer subplot strains belief) and Sean Connery turns in a good supporting role. C+

Sleeping with the Enemy — Though often running the women in jeopardy road, this Joseph Ruben (The Stepfather) film manages to keep the audience entertained. Bad hubby Patrick Bergin loves his wife (Julia Roberts) — to death. When she flees his abuses, he quickly strikes up a search for the object of his twisted desire. Soon Julia finds her way into a nice suburban neighborhood and meets a love interest who makes her happy, but dark clouds loom on the horizon. Until the ending, which lays out a top ten list of studio heads' favorite horror flick conventions (the slightly ajar cellar door, the villain that won't die), Roberts succeeds in making the audience like her character, and the movie follows an enjoyable course. If you can forgive the last 15 minutes, you'll find this film entertaining and a bit thrilling. B-

Mortal Thoughts — Bruce Willis travels the sleezeball route as an adulterous acquaintance, who implicates real-life spouse Demi Moore, implicated in a whirlwind murder investigation via his own death. Moore, playing a harried hairstylist, sports a bad New York accent ("yeah, dat's wicked orr-some"). She becomes the target of the murder probe, when all evidence points that she may have killed her friend's hubby (Willis) while fending off his advances in the back of a van. Director Alan J. Pakula utilizes numerous flashbacks to answer the question "What happened in the back of that van?" My question is "Do we care?" Despite good performances by Harvey Keitel and Glenne Headly (Dick Tracy) this film plays like a slower-paced "Law and Order" rerun. C+

Pump up the Volume — Christian Slater continues his "I wish I was Jack Nicholson," stance, by playing novels, I've seen. The film isn't as detailed as the book, yet there are the same quiet moments of realization.

The ending of the film is achy and woefully melodramatic, but keep in mind how bad it could've been. Anchored by a more than capable cast, Life gets points for avoiding easy cliches (at least part of the time). And it does do something the book never did, which is let us know what happened to the characters. One could see it as ruining the ambiguity and selling out, but I say get over it. These days, when movies like Indecent Proposal are considered quality adult fare, I can forgive Life's user-friendly ending.

Credit director Caton-Jones' intriguing camera work for delivering a freshly unsentimental view of '50s life, a time when father was supposed to know best and where people were defined by hopelessly rigid roles. Caton-Jones shoots the town of Concrete unsympathetically, letting its oppressively flat atmosphere contradict most Hollywood recreations of lively and vivid '50s life.

With superb performances (DiCaprio and Blechman especially) and an intelligent script, This Boy's Life turns out to be a good version of a great book. B+

another rebel with a cause in suburban California. Here he drops the homicidal instincts, established in Heathers, and settles in, as a shy high school student by day, who rules the pirate radio airwaves at night, urging his peers to seize the day. Directed by Alan Moyle, this is a fresh, original film, rising above standard after school special dribble due to a crisp script, a pumping soundtrack and good performances by Slater and newcomer Samantha Mathis. B+

Stephen King's Silver Bullet — Bearing little resemblance to the Stephen King novella, Cycle of the Werewolf, this is run-of-the-mill horror shock that as with most King translations, suffers miserably on screen and fails to evoke the primal horror inherent to his novels. Perennial Teen Beat cover-boy Corey Haim stars as the wheelchairbound lead, trying to warn his unsuspecting town of the presence of a werewolf masquerading within the local clergy. Only drunkard Gary Busey believes him, and the two set out to rid the town of this dark menace (ultra PC buddie movie concept: "One's vertically challenged, the other's a recovering alcoholic. Together they have a stake in hunting the undead.") Though there are a few scares, overall this film is quite forgettable. C-

Nuns on the Run — Playing like a retro Sister Act, two men married to the English mob decide to heist a cache of cash and make a break from their unsavory pursuers by doffing habits and hiding out in an all-girls parochial school. Monthy Python alum Eric Idle and British comedian Robbie Coltrane have a good time in drag (a la Billy Wilder's Some Like It Hot), but the humor waxes sophomoric and often doesn't rise above men in women's locker room stabs. Though very unoriginal, this is still a fun little diversion. B

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A friend could make an attractive offer. Be certain it has a solid foundation. You cannot afford to give up a sure thing for something that may not pan out.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your knowledge may be incomplete. There is more to a transaction than appears on the surface. Find out the facts. A friend may offer you a special treat.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New rewards are indicated for your ceaseless efforts. Although certain plans may need modification, you are on the right track. Maintain your strong sense of values.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A new attitude is needed to achieve a special goal. Study the data available but be ready for the unexpected. Loved one will pull no punches when it comes to settling domestic problems.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Breakthroughs are possible in science, literature and the arts. Follow through on a pet project. Doors will open if you pour on the charm. Financial gains are linked to the written word.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A conversation about money leads to deep, analytical thought. Adopt a conservation approach and you can not go wrong. Let your partner take the lead in romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Put little stock in promises. The people making them are talking through their hats. A "white elephant" could turn out to be a real treasure. Get several appraisals before selling it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): your expertise is in great demand today. If your professional advice is sought, make certain you get paid. Stay out of a domestic spat if you want to remain friends with both parties.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be wary of speculative deals. You must take direct action to fulfill a personal wish. Help someone confined to a hospital or nursing home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A friend or neighbor expresses thanks for past favors. Give priority to an artistic project. Postpone business negotiations. Better terms will be offered very soon.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do what you can to improve your productivity without alienating those at home. Streamlining your schedule gives you more time for creative projects.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Creative endeavors prove especially rewarding now. A romantic relationship is tested. You learn who really cares for you. Keep a tighter rein on spending.

finished seventh. The weather forced LaFrenniere to hold the 4x400 m relay team back from their race.

In the field events, Dianne Ozzolek was the standout, placing sixth overall in the hammer with a throw of 152'9". Natalie Hart placed eighth in the discus. They both competed in the Championship division, featuring the top ten athletes in the nation.

Sunday went much better for the Minutewomen at Dartmouth. Hart set a new school discus record with a 152'8", winning the event. Hart came in second in the shot put with a 42'9.5" with Ozzolek taking third.

Julie Moreau was second in the 5000 m in 18:15.96. Becky Johnson placed third in the 1500 m, with Liljeblad fifth. "Both runners went out too fast and it cost them in the end," LaFrenniere said.

Dartmouth was a meet for strength and conditioning, no team scores were counted. The New England Championships are the ultimate goal for this team.

"A strong showing (at the New Englands) would make our season, it is by far are most important meet", LaFrenniere said.

Zoo Disc ready for road after doing well at home

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts ultimate frisbee team, Zoo Disc, hosted a successful tournament this past Saturday, its first home appearance of the season.

Although much of the Hoopla on campus surrounded Haigas Mall for the three-on-three basketball tournament, Zoo Disc needed only their own intensity for an exciting day.

The tournament, which consisted of eight teams, pitted Zoo Disc against Middlebury in the opening round. Although Middlebury took a quick 2-0 lead, the home team soon settled down and took charge of the game with their controlled playing style, running the score to 8-4 at half.

The entire team performed exceptionally well, using individual performances and skills to work together as a unit. Teamwork made their defense unbeatable in the second half, with everyone contributing and no one letting up.

Zoo Disc's defense caused turnovers in the second half, and the offense ran up the score until they ended the game 15-4, with a pass to the diving Chris "Beano" Candiello.

This brought the team face-to-face with Harvard in the second round, and it was a battle from the onset. Harvard got momentum and put Zoo Disc in the hole 8-3 at halftime.

Zoo Disc came back with a vengeance

What is a Textbook Buyback?

Three times during each semester the Textbook Annex brings in a wholesaler to buy textbooks from students. Wholesalers are in the business of selling used books to colleges and universities across the country. Therefore, in determining how much they will pay a student for a book they must consider the demand for that book as well as the shipping and handling costs involved in processing and reselling the book. This is why prices vary and indeed change frequently. Generally only current editions have value.

The best time to sell books is at the end of the semester. At that time the Annex will pay 50% of the new price for a book if we have an order for that book for the following semester and we need to purchase copies. If we do not, the wholesaler may make you an offer.

If you have questions please ask the people doing the buyback or the Annex staff. They will be more than happy to answer your questions and give you any tips that may be applicable to your situation.

*A Picture ID is Required for all Buyback Transactions.

When is the next Textbook Buyback?

The end of the semester Textbook Buyback is:

MAY 13 - MAY 26

while building an Eastern power under some adverse conditions. Bravo.

• The Celtics and the Hornets and the Green are not a lock to win it. Red Auerbach must wonder what's going on.

• The Gorillas face the Orangemen this weekend. As a reminder of UMass' dominance let's have Harper Williams sing the National Anthem AND throw out the first ball. Hey Mike Fagerson, do they throw out a first ball at lax games? Turn down the volume on your TV set (okay, just bring a radio to the Hill) and turn up Fagerson for Saturday's game - he'll be in rare form for sure.

• This time of year loses something without Larry Bird. You always knew he was going to step up and win a couple of playoff affairs on sheer determination.

• Eddie Andelman is going to be made an honorary UMass alumnus at the UMass Basketball dinner in Boston on May 6. Isn't this the same guy that was making fun of UMass last year? What is an honorary alumnus? A guy who couldn't get into UMass in the first place?

• Keep your feet in bounds and your eyes on Reggie Lewis.

in the second half and made it a contest. Both teams were passing well but Zoo Disc had a defensive edge highlighted by great blocks by the team, particularly some end zone stops by Paul Freddella.

Zoo Disc's offense quickly caught up and eventually tied the score at 13-13. The game went to overtime with Harvard managing to put it away in the end with a final of 16-14.

Ferrari's return drives men past UNH

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Led by the timely return of right-handed pitcher Peter Ferrari and the consistently hot Minutemen bats, the University of Massachusetts baseball team silenced the University of New Hampshire Wildcats 10-5 Tuesday.

Ferrari, who had been on the disabled list with rotator cuff problems and shoulder tendinitis, came back magnificently for five-and-two-thirds innings of one-hit ball.

Ferrari left the game with a 3-2 lead and watched as it quickly turned into a 5-4 deficit. Luckily, the big bats of UMass bailed out reliever Jay Murphy, who did get credit for the victory, and the Minutemen won their fourth straight game.

"I'm not disappointed I didn't get a W, I'm just happy I could help the team out," said Ferrari. "I didn't really know about the no-hitter until the fifth inning and I didn't let it bother me."

The fifth inning not only saw the end of Ferrari's no-hitter, it also saw the end of Ferrari. Right fielder Jon Batchelder doubled down the line to finish Ferrari's bid, and three key miscues, two errors and a wild pitch, got the starter in trouble and cut the UMass lead to 3-2.

A Joe Mattivello sacrifice fly RBI scored Greg LaRocca in the bottom of the sixth to put UMass up 4-2, New Hampshire struck back in the seventh with three runs. The last came on Brett Elmore's sacrifice fly, which put UNH up 6-5, their first lead of the day.

Both Steve Corradi and Justin Howard atoned for earlier errors with crucial at-bats in the bottom of the seventh. Corradi's bunt hit put Nelson Ubaldo, who led off with a walk, on third with nobody out, and after Justin Kelly's ground out tied the score at 5-5, Howard stepped up with one out.

The team's leading hitter lofted pitch to center which seemed too shallow to score the speedy Corradi from third. Corradi tagged up, and in the game's most costly mistake, UNH third baseman Alex Watson cut off a perfect throw and threw home too late. UMass had a 6-5 lead which they built on with four in the eighth, two on reserve Shaun Berryman's two-run double.

Jeff Toothaker picked up the save. UNH head coach Dave Bettencourt forfeited the game with no outs in the ninth when he was ejected by the first base umpire, whom Bettencourt thought should not have been umpiring. Six years ago, the man was an assistant baseball coach position at UMass for two months.

Gorillas look to extend win streak against BC

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team continues their four-game homestand today when they face off at 3 p.m. against Boston College at Richard F. Garber field.

The Gorillas are riding a seven-game win streak and have vaulted to No. 7 (from 10th) in the USILA polls after defeating the No. 15 team in the nation, Rutgers, on Saturday. Although unranked, the Eagles have a respectable 7-5 record and boast three players with thirty points or more on the season.

BC's Laurens Goff has the team lead in goals with 30 and has compiled 13 assists for an impressive 43 points. The team lead in assists belongs to Bill Ochmler with 27 — he also has chipped in with 12 goals. Other hangnails for UMass will be Jason Silkey, who has 26 goals on the year (seven assists) and Rich Merklinger, who has 23 goals to go along with six assists.

The Eagles have certainly had their hands full with the Gorillas over the years as UMass leads the series 19-0 and has averaged a whopping 17.5 goals per game. Last year, BC played with UMass for a quarter and then were blown out 18-8 thanks to five goals from Wes Depp and three from Mark Millon.

Depp and Millon, the Gorillas' top two scorers with 28 and 39 goals, respectively, will be the focus of the Eagles' defense tomorrow, so teammates Mike Valente (10 goals, nine assists), Greg Kline (seven goals, 11 assists) and Eric Triolo (10 goals) will have to pick up the slack. Goalie Tom LoPresti, who had a season-high 19 saves against Rutgers, will probably be in goal again for UMass.

Gorilla Grumblings: With the win against Rutgers, UMass has now won eight straight at home.

The Gorillas present No. 7 ranking is the highest since the end of the 1989 season, when they were ranked sixth in the nation.

Today's game can be heard on 91.1 F.M. WMUA with the voice of Gorilla Lacrosse, Mike Fagerson, doing the play-by-play and Jason Nash on color.

Softball on tap for two

Team faces PC; Kuchinskas a leader

By JASON NASH
Collegian Staff

Ask any softball or baseball coach what they typically expect out of any ordinary catcher and they will probably tell you great defense, with anything else in the form of good hitting being considered a fringe benefit.

However, taking a look at the masterpiece hitting (along with great defense) University of Massachusetts softball catcher Sherri Kuchinskas has performed this Spring proves her to be anything but an ordinary catcher.

Heading into today's doubleheader at Providence (3 p.m.), UMass' (16-15 overall, 7-1 in the A-10) Kuchinskas is one of the top hitters in the East.

Even those teams that have not faced the senior Kuchinskas should shiver in the dugout after just looking at her staggering statistics, where she leads UMass in 14 out of 18 major offensive categories, including batting average (.455), home runs (5), runs batted in (26), slugging percentage (.739).

"I know I'm hitting well," said Kuchinskas. "But we never see our stats, and all I know is that we've been winning."

On top of her offense, Kuchinskas also has played near perfect defense, being behind the plate for all 31 games and anchoring what might be the best pitching staff in the region, a staff which has boasted a 2.22 earned run average as a team this year.

"Sherri has been an integral part of the pitching staff," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "She's taken the time to know the pitchers and she's been their best coach."

"When we're on the field, Sherri's the one who tells us what to do and we all listen to her," said outfielder Stacy Nichols. "She's not afraid say anything needed to keep this team in shape."

One more area Kuchinskas especially excels in is game-winning RBI, where she leads the team with seven, quickly changing her name from "Kuchinskas" to "CLUTCHinskas"

"I like the pressure," said Kuchinskas. "When the game's on the line I want to be the one up at the plate."

Women's lax on road trip to face Wildcats of UNH

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team continued their rebuilding season as they were defeated twice last weekend, on Saturday at Vermont and on Sunday in a home game played at the Lower Boyden Fields against Temple.

Coaches Bob Little and Karen Marley said they did not expect the Minutewomen to defeat the two nationally-ranked teams. After all, their main goals this season do not include winning games, but to improve each game.

On Saturday, the Catamounts of Vermont jumped out to a quick 5-0 lead in the first 7:39 of the first half. UMass senior Rachael Splaine scored the first of her five goals with 16:48 left in the first half to put the Minutewomen on the board.

Vermont then outscored UMass, 5-1, in the final thirteen minutes for a 10-2 halftime lead. In the second half, Splaine scored the first goal 51 seconds into the last period, but the Catamounts answered with eight consecutive goals to take an 18-3 lead before defeating UMass, 20-8.

Rachael Splaine finished with five goals, junior Keri Brooks scored two, and Sam Eustace chipped into the scoring effort with a goal. Eustace and Brooks also contributed an assist apiece for the Minutewomen.

Next up for the Minutewomen was Temple, ranked eighth in the nation. The Owls proved to be too powerful for the inexperienced Minutewomen as they scored their first goal 19 seconds into the first half and had a 12-0 lead at halftime.

The second half was almost the same, as Temple scored eleven goals to UMass' four as the Owls trounced the Minutewomen, 21-4. Splaine was the leading scorer for UMass once again as she scored four goals. Brooks added an assist.

The Minutewomen (0-6) go head to head against yet another nationally-ranked team as they travel to Durham, NH for today's 3 p.m. game against New Hampshire (8-4).

"(UNH) is ranked in the nation," said coach Marley. "We are going to give it our all. We are not going for the win. If we can do the things we set out to do, we'll be all right."

Scott's shots: hockey again?

Did anyone think of telling the Bruins that the playoffs had actually begun?

Friends who can define icing tell me, in terms I can relate to, that the Bruins being swept is equivalent to the Knicks dropping three straight to Indiana. Wowza.

(Two consecutive weeks with hockey at the forefront? Scott's been sniffing model glue again.)

He said he wants the library in the Top 20 by 2000. Is that USA Today's or AP's? With a good recruiting class, perhaps some oversized books up front and some pocket-sized tomes to bring up the ball, Cal can turn it around. Refuse to Lose, Reading is Fun, Cal's Your Pal.

• The Patriots selected former UMass standout Jerome Bledsoe with the first pick in the NFL draft. Good pick. What? Drew Bledsoe. Who the heck's he? Okay, sounds all right.

• Last week Steve Corradi appeared in this very space, this week the guy's named Atlantic 10 Player-of-the Week — coincidence? Now we ask How-Ard thou? Justin fine, thanks.

Not only is it worth a trip to Lorden Field to see some great hitting, but assistant coach John Carelli provides some Vaudeville-like entertainment as first-base coach.

This past weekend's series saw Carelli talking with the Bonnie's first basemen, the umpire, selected fans and press box occupants. All the while coaching a flawless game at first. He's a sitcom waiting to happen. "Seinfeld" watch out. Perhaps Tom Clark can be Carelli's Kramer.

• Don't lose faith in the Red Sox, plans are underway for the remainder of the season to be played at Fenway. Lou's Plan.

I would have bet my roommate's life that Roger would have won Sunday's nationally televised game to end a four-game skid.

• Our illustrious bartender at the Montague Inn, Tina, has gone too far this time. I warned her if she beat me one more time in pool, I would never return. She must not have heard me.

You've got one more chance Tina. One. Uno. That's it.

• Let's not overlook Elaine Sortino's accomplishments in 14 years at UMass. She's racked up 402 wins against 183 losses and one tie (a tribute to hockey we assume)

Track team finish Relays, head to N.E.s

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's track and field team competed in the Penn Relays and the Dartmouth invitational with mixed results. The Minutemen now are gearing up for the New England Championships May 7-8.

The Penn Relays were miserable this season. Conditions were horrible as it was extremely cold and windy. The performances of everyone suffered.

"Our athletes would warm up, then be forced to strip down to their uniforms for a half an hour, their muscles would cramp after half of the race," said coach Julie LaFrenniere.

The vaunted UMass 4x800 m relay team, featuring Becky Johnson, Kerry Aker, Lennice Johnson and Kim Liljeblad suffered in these conditions and Female pilots to fly in combat missions

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a revolutionary change for the U.S military, Defense Secretary Les Aspin ordered the service chiefs Wednesday to drop restrictions on women flying combat missions and serving aboard most navy warships.

"The steps we are taking today are historic," Aspin said at a news conference attended by the chiefs of the Air Force, Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

The policy change means that within a year, dozens of women could be flying Navy and Air Force fighter jets and piloting the Army's most lethal attack choppers.

Permitting women to serve aboard warships will require congressional action. Aspin said he had instructed Adm. Frank Kelso, the chief of naval operations, to prepare the ground work for a legislative proposal to end this prohibition.

"The Navy is ready to go," Kelso said.

The defense secretary also told the services to provide justification if they want to put any battlefield role off limits to women.

Aspin said he also asked the Marine Corps and the Army to study ways of finding jobs for women in field artillery and air defense combat units. Infantry, armor and cavalry would remain off limits to women, the officials said.

"Direct combat. . . is a role we should (limit) to men," said Gen. Carl Mundy, the Marine Corps commandant.

Gen. Gordon Sullivan, the Army chief of staff, said women would begin training for combat missions in Apache and Cobra attack helicopters "almost immediately."

The changes mean thousands of jobs and prestige positions once open only to men will now be open to women.

DANCING FROM (AND FOR) THE HEART — Over 200 people in the Curry Hicks Cage last night paid to "dance for heart" and benefit the American Heart Association. Organizers said they raised $650, $150 beyond their goal. Several area businesses sponsored the event and some UMass athletic teams volunteered to help organizers set up. These dances are held at clubs, colleges and universities across the country all year long.

'93 class gift given to women's center

By NICOLE BURKE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts senior class will leave this May with more than just their diploma, they will be leave knowing they have helped a part of the college community.

This year, the Class of 1993 will present its senior class gift to the Everywoman's Center. Operating out of Wilder Hall, the EWC provides workshops, counseling programs and support services specifically for women.

"The Senior Campaign Committee decided to support the Everywoman's Center this year," said Theresa Forte, a senior English major and chairperson of this year's senior campaign. "The EWC is a good place for the money to go because they have had so many budget cuts."

Forte said members of the senior committee have been contacting graduating seniors throughout April with letters and phone calls informing students about the senior class gift and asking for donations.

"It's really hard," Forte said. "Most seniors don't have jobs but we explain that they can pay in August. Most are hesitant at first, but when they realize what it's all about, they help."

$25,531 has been pledged so far, half way to reaching the campaign goal of $42,000, said Forte.

Nader: fight corporate influence

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

People need to fight corporate influence and participate, instead, in community service and advocacy, said noted consumer advocate political activist Ralph Nader, in a lecture last night at Bowker Auditorium.

"There's very little awareness as to what community service is all about," Nader said, noting that this ignorance is propagated by today's corporations.

On the consumer/taxpayer side there is very little information," he said.

Nader said sellers spend all their time touting their wares and ignore important economic issues. He asked the audience to imagine an announcement in their local supermarket saying, "Attention shoppers! We'd like you to know that American farmers earn about as much as this country spends on excess food packaging."

"Are we going to be part of the civil culture or are we going to be part of the commercial culture?" Nader asked.

"When thinking about what our civil role should be, the first thing to consider is time," he said. "Do we want to allocate our time to civil pursuits? People spent little time monitoring government. Most people don't think they count."

Nader said our time is often shaped by corporate policy, for example the growing need for multiple incomes in families.

"Before you know it, they've got us so busy making ends meet, they can rule us forever more," he said.

Nader said television has a tremendous influence on

UMass skirted state ban for '60s building boom

Editor's note: The following is the last of a four-part series commemorating the University's 130th anniversary.

By PATRICK BROWNE
Special to the Collegian

Immediately following the close of World War II, the "GI Bill" was established, allowing war veterans to attend college for free. Enrollment figures at tiny Mass State College began to skyrocket. A radical transformation would have to take place if the college was to accommodate this influx of students.

Hugh Baker was president of the college at the time. His housing plan called for two groups of dorms. The first group would be constructed around Thatcher and Lewis to create a "Women's Quad" (now Northeast Area). And a "Men's Quad" would be constructed on the Hill (now Central Area).

Unfortunately, money was scarce. The initial construction could only be made possible through alumni funding organized by Alden Brett, class of 1912. Brett's Alumni Building Authority was responsible for the construction of all the buildings in the Men's and Women's Quads and also a great deal of our academic buildings.

On April 20, 1947, acknowledging the growing population of the college, legislature agreed to change its name to the University of Massachusetts. In the same year, President Baker left office.

Ralph VanMeter succeeded him. Only two buildings of Baker's dormitory plan, Greenough and Chadbourne, were built by 1947. Over the course of his term in office, VanMeter worked to finish off the Men's and Women's Quad. Hamlin, Knowlton, Brooks and Mills dormitories went up in 1949. Crabtree and Leach followed in 1953.

Now that the emergency of housing students had been temporarily settled, VanMeter concentrated on constructing new academic buildings. In the early 1950s the University of Massachusetts was still cramped into agricultural buildings that had been a part of Butterfield's construction plan of the 1910s. The original dormitory, Old South College, was being used as the Administration Building, and North College as the School of Management. Humanities classes were held in the Old Chapel, the natural sciences were cramped into the old Botanic Museum.

VanMeter remedied this situation by constructing Hasbrouck Hall for physics and Gunness Lab for engineering in 1949. Marston Hall and Paige Lab followed in 1950 for engineering and Animal Science respectively.

Van Meter's successor, Jean Paul Mather, took office in 1954. President Mather is arguably the most important figure in the history of the University due to the building explosion which he pushed through. The enrollment of the University was approaching 5,000 in 1955 and was expected to double by 1965. With this in mind, Mather drew up a building plan which called for more than thirty buildings. Mather's goal was to create a booming, modern University which could compete with the sprawling state institutions of the Midwest. Mather's primary focus was liberal arts. In 1955 North College was torn down to make room for the first liberal arts classroom building, Machmer Hall. More than 15 buildings went up during Mather's administration including Worcester Dining Commons in 1954, the Student Union in 1956, the Morrill Science Center in 1957 and Bartlett Hall in 1959.

With his construction plan only half completed, Mather passed the baton to John Lederle in 1960. Not only would Lederle complete the building explosion, but he would add elements to it that Mather never could have imagined. Mather's original plan for Southwest Area was comprised solely of low rise buildings and would have sprawled across an incredible area. Lederle shrunk it down by coming up with the idea of six towers (only five of which were constructed in 1965). Orchard Hill, an experimental residential area where classes would be taught, was Oliver Tambo was the leader of the African National Congress in exile. He is credited with leading Africa's oldest liberation movement through its most difficult period in the struggle to liberate the South African people. The event will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center 917. The event is sponsored by South African/Azanian Student Movement. For more information, please contact Gabi Gumbi at 546-3085.

Film — The film, Attica, about the 1971 New York prison rebellion and subsequent massacre of the prisoners by the police will be shown at 7 p.m. in Thompson 106. Following the film, there will be a discussion about prisons, prisoners and the Ohio Prison rebellion. The event is sponsored by the Maost Internationalist Movement and the Office of Third World Affairs.

Poet — Warren Blumenfeld, poet, will be at the Campus Center 162 from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. for "Nazi Persecution of Gays During the Holocaust." The event is sponsored by Hillel and the UMass Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance. For more information, please call 549-1710.

Lifeguard Testing — Lifeguard testing for Fall 1993. The test includes timed 500-yard swim and lifeguard and CPR skills. You must have current certification in Lifeguard Training, CPR and Standard First Aid. The event will be held in the Boyden Pool from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

Reading — Valerie Martin, novelist and short story writer, will read from her work at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Martin has published four novels and two collections of short fiction. She will read from a recently completed novel. The Visiting Writers Series and the English Department invite all to attend.

Study Abroad — Information meeting for the 1994 UMass program in Siena, Italy will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Herter Hall 301.

Saturday, May 1

Environment — Calling all volunteers with a concern for the environment. Come to the Hitchcock Center for the Environment at 10 a.m. for a spring clean up. Help the staff of The Center paint, garden, cut brush and do trail maintenance. Meet others wou share an interest, families and groups welcome. Call 256-6006 for info.

Supper — There will be a Committee for Northampton community potluck supper at 6 p.m. in the Jackson School Cafeteria followed by a speaker and informal discussion. For more information, call Peter Ives at 584-9392.

Community Service — Volunteers are needed to build a school playground, paint cahool rooms and the town's swimming pools, spruce up nature trails, prepare planters for summer bulbs and annual flowering plants, and clean up trash around Amherst. Lecture to discuss FBI tonight

Tonight, as the second half of the "Crimes of the FBI" lecture series, two authors plan to discuss their research into a number of the allegedly illegal FBI activities.

Sigmund Diamond, author of Compromised Campus, will talk about his 10 years of research into the FBI's involvement with professors and students at Harvard and Yale during the McCarthy era. Diamond, a graduate of Harvard, saw first hand the involvement of the FBI on campus meant to monitor alleged "communist" activities.

The second speaker will be Pulitzer Prize-winner Ross Gelbspan. As a reporter for the Boston Globe, Gelbspan's research into the Iran-Contra affair led him to write the book Break-ins, Death Threats, and the FBI.

Gelbspan will discuss the FBI's alleged harassment of political groups affiliated with Latin American countries as well as a wide range of FBI activities during the 1980s.

The event will take place at 7 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union, better known as Earthfoods.

In the coming weeks, the Air Force is prepared to put its first female pilot into training to fly its F-15 Eagle fighter-bomber, Air Force officials said Tuesday.

Female Navy instructors who fly the EA-6 Prowler electronic warfare jets could be among the first to be deployed aboard aircraft carriers, Navy officials said, while others will enter specialized courses to command F-A-18 Hornet strike-fighters or F-14 Tomcats.

About one-third of the Army's 300 female helicopter pilots are expected to volunteer for attack pilot training in the service's most lethal chopper, the Apache, Army officials said Wednesday.

Gen. Sullivan said the new policy will open more than 6,000 additional officer, warrant officer and enlisted positions to women.

The money will be added to the senior class endowment and the interest from the endowment then goes to the EWC.

"There are 4,000 graduating seniors, but we only have 2,100 names on our updated list," Forte said. "But we've still gotten pledges ranging from $10 to the symbolic gift of $93, and we've even had some pledges of $250."

Forte said that by calling the Senior Campaign Committee at Memorial Hall at 545-3509, the seniors who have not been included on the list can still contribute to the senior class gift and support the EWC.

"I was thrilled," said Carol Wallace, director of the EWC. "It's really wonderful to know that students recognize the critical services that we provide."

Wallace said two-thirds of EWC's funding comes from the University while the remaining one-third comes from external sources.

"The external sources, like the senior class gift, pay for 100 percent of the costs of our counseling services," Wallace said. "But we still need additional resources for the future, and this depends a lot on our external funding."

Heather Roche, a communications major, made a $35 pledge. "I'm a senior," she said, "and I want to give something back to the school."

Tracey Terra, a senior English major and president of the Student Alumni Association, pledged $50 to the senior class gift. She said she also feels contributing is important.

"By working in the Alumni office, I've come to realize the importance of support for UMass whether financial or not," she said. "I plan on contributing a little each year and I look forward to becoming an active alumni."

people's views and activities.

"We grow up corporate when we nag our parents to buy food we see on TV — food that's not nutritious," he said. Taking hot dogs as an example, "I saw it in the Student Union today — one deadly pink missile.

"We slither 15 billion of them down our throats every year and never asked what's in it," Nader said. "If we did, we wouldn't eat them unless we were masochists."

Television has a numbing affect on people, which results in a fundamental loss of self-determination and community building, he said.

"We are reduced in our sensory responses and interaction with human beings as we stare more and more at the screen... and it leaves the streets empty," Nader said. "Everywhere around the country volunteer groups are folding."

To reverse this growing trend, brought on by the corporate influence, we must return to our roots of civic activity, Nader said.

"Corporations didn't give women the right to vote. Corporations didn't defend Rosa Parks after she was thrown off the bus. Corporations didn't give us farmer co-ops. This was done by civic activity," he said.

Taking an active civil role requires a certain level of self-confidence, commitment and determination, since there are no training sessions to be "skilled citizens," he said.

Nader voiced his approval of the activities of MassPIRG and the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign, a group which advocates banning private campaign contributions from use in state and federal elections.

"The best way to reduce one's prescription level of valium is to be civically active," Nader said. "Through that, we can truly build a formula for human happiness."

New face for SW courts unveiled by Coach Cal

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

In a joint effort between the Southwest Area Government and Housing Services here at the University of Massachusetts, the Southwest basketball courts received a $3,000 overhaul, including new backboards, breakaway rims, and a paint job.

UMass basketball head coach John Calipari was on hand at the request of SWAG Vice-president Michelle Williams to christen the new courts in an informal ribbon-cutting ceremony. Calipari said he felt that his responsibility as a basketball coach was not only to take care of his players, but the campus community as well.

"I think I have more of a responsibility to the campus than just basketball coaching. If there is any way I can help out the campus, I will," said Calipari.

Williams, who asked Calipari to come to the courts, said she felt that he is one person who could get everyone in Southwest interested in the new courts.

"He is the man of basketball. Almost everyone in Southwest goes to the games at Mullins Center," said Williams. "This is a predominately athletic area, and I knew by mentioning his name it would draw a crowd. It is really something to be excited about."

The idea of the refurbishing the courts first came about last year, according to Williams, when she, Jody Weinberg, and Eric Wheeler, who ran for office in SWAG on a ticket together, promised during the campaign to get the detiorating courts refurbished.

Williams worked together with Linda Keith, the area coordinator for Southwest-South, and Marcia Armstrong, the operations manager for Southwest-South, to figure out what the project would cost. Keith said the money would be taken from the fund used for maintenance.

Some students who play on the courts said they like the improvements.

"I think it will be good as long as the nets stay up and the rims don't bend. I thought it was fine the other way, but it's better," said sophomore Kerri Murphy.

"[By fixing the courts] at least they put the money to good use," said sophomore Steve Richards.

Grad student still going for the gold

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

When 79-year-old Phyllis Rodin asked her friend's next-door-neighbor to be quiet two years ago, Rodin said she was thrown to the ground. She was kicked in the head and had her collarbone injured.

"I heard crack, crack and that is all I remember," Rodin said. After the incident, Rodin said she kept dreaming of a boot going toward her. Because she was having trouble concentrating, Rodin said her doctoral studies in education at the University of Massachusetts were suffering.

"I could not read. I could not write," Rodin said. "So I had to start from the beginning."

After Rodin was evaluated by Dr. Patricia Mercaitis, a clinic coordinator in the Speech Language Pathology Clinic located in Arnold House, she requested a video copy of her evaluation. All services at the Communication Disorders Clinic are provided in a confidential manner, Mercaitis said.

By reviewing the video, Rodin said it helped her better remember the incident and freed her to work toward a full recovery, Rodin said.

"I saw a tape of myself and I knew I would get better," Rodin said. "That is the thing that saved my life."

With her confidence back and the resolution to conquer her back pain, Rodin started swimming, first at the Hampshire Fitness Club at Echo Hill and then at the Totman Physical Education Building.

A friend suggested last summer that she sign up for the New England Senior Olympics. She won four medals.

"I want to live till at least 220."

– Phyllis Rodin

Now Rodin is going for a week this summer to Baton Rouge, La. for the National Senior Olympics. To train for the competition, Rodin swims everyday at 8 a.m. in Totman. Rodin can do a half a mile, which is 136 lengths, in 45 minutes, she said proudly.

"It has been absolutely marvelous. I jump into the water and I go cluck, cluck," Rodin said. "Say a big 'hello' for physical ed. For three semesters, I have depended on on them."

Rodin said spending many years in Italy, India and Japan, has kept her mentally young. In Europe age does not make a difference; Rodin said she has a 96-year-old friend, who recently climbed an Alpine peak in Italy. He was part of the British forces that crossed the Alpines during World War II.

"Here you are old when you are 35," Rodin said. "I know when I am 84 I am going to get a black belt and at 96 I am going to drop out. I want to live till at least 220."

Rodin, who wears an "I am an outrageous older women" button, said she has experienced ageism and sexism at some of the University facilities. When Rodin was given a fellowship to work at the Institute for Security and Cooperation in Outer Space in Washington, D.C., she refused. And when she got her master's in education psychology, she said she fought with the Wisconsin Board of Trustees to change the wording from master's to a mistress.

"They wanted to give me a fellowship, but I wouldn't take it. I didn't want to be a fellow. I didn't want a master's. I wanted to be a mistress. They do that in England, you know," Rodin said. "I kept telling them that I could not have a masters. How could a women go for a bachelors? Do you know what that means?"

Rodin said she plans to do her dissertation, "Education for a Space Age," on video. She wants to work with children, using video as a teaching tool.

"The kids relate to me as a friend. I get a great deal of satisfaction with these things," Rodin said. "I better get going, before they land on Mars."

Senate wants campus closed on Yom Kippur

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

The Unergraduate Student Senate passed a motion last night suggesting to Chancellor Richard O'Brien that the University be closed on the Jewish holiday of Yom Kippur.

The motion, which was defeated in the Senate last week by one vote, was reconsidered and passed by a margin of 24 to 13. Sen. Alan H. Weinfeld said the issue is not about religion but of respect.

"This issue is very important to the Jewish community," Weinfeld said. "This is not a religious issue. It has to do with respect for the 20 percent of the student population that is Jewish."

Weinfeld said many Jewish students consider University policies towards Jewish holidays when they are deciding upon which college to attend.

"Many Jews look at what holidays the University observes and what Jewish life is like in general heavily when they are deciding if they are going to come here," he said. "This holiday would make a statement to people on campus and to those who are considering coming here."

Student Trustee-elect Arnold J. Lizana said he supported the motion because Jewish students often experience difficulty convincing their professors to let them have the day off.

"This is a simple issue of respect," Lizana said. "If the current policy were working, we wouldn't be having a problem of getting out of classes and rearranging our exam schedules. When one [religious group] is respected we're all respected."

The Senate also discussed Provost Glen Gordon's plan to simplify the University's general education diversity requirements.

Currently, students must take any two diversity courses. Gordon told the Senate

Pending financial aid reform sends students to Congress

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Staff

Students from the University of Massachusetts took their own personal experiences along with those of others down to Washington D.C. last week to try to make changes in the financial aid system.

Approximately 40 members of Students Advocating Financial Aid (SAFA) raised money, and used some of their own, to pay for transportation and a three-day stay in Washington D.C.

According to SAFA President Anne-Marie Cervini, the students had scheduled appointments with congressmen and representatives so they could talk to them about supporting the concerns of students who are in need of financial aid.

"Our main function is to fight for greater accessibility for people interested in higher education," Cervini said.

SAFA members asked congressmen what they were doing to make changes regarding financial aid.

"The people that we talked to stressed how wonderful it was to hear about the concerns of college students," Cervini said. "The response was positive, because we were organized and advocated in a professional way."

There were three major issues of concern which the students from UMass discussed with the legislators, said Cervini.

The first issue had to do with the Pell Grant Program, the backbone of financial aid, which awards students federal grants to finance their educations.

A shortfall of funds for Pell Grants has accumulated because of the federal budget deficit, and SAFA members asked that changes be made to revitalize the program.

SAFA members also lobbied the federal government to lend money directly to students, rather than through banks, as is currently the case.

There are over 80 banks in Massachusetts which issue student loans once a person has qualified for financial aid. According to Cervini, having a middleman like a bank creates extra costs in transaction fees, and SAFA asked for a new, more efficient method.

"There have been some cases that students have been academically withdrawn from the University because loans from the banks have not been processed in time," Cervini said. "We weren't asking for immediate change, but for at least some type of program to be started."

SAFA also championed the National Student's Program, being pushed by the White House as part of President Bill Clinton's stimulus package.

This program would enable graduate students to participate in community service jobs and waive payments on their loans for up to three or four years.

Cervini said she felt the outcome of the trip was very successful and SAFA's ideas were heard by many people who supported the main issues.

last night he would like to require next year's freshman to take one course in global diversity and one course in contemporary American diversity issues. Gordon said it is important that students have an understanding of the racial issues in the United States.

"Whites are the majority in the United States but they are the minority in the world," Gordon said. "It is important that we teach students their place in the world. They must understand how to get along in the diverse world we live in in order to compete in the global economy."

Gordon announced that the University will hire 11 new minority professors by September.

"The candidates are among the best I have ever seen come through," he said.

It was also announced at that Budget Chair Nathan Guerero was impeached by committee members three weeks before the election was scheduled. Sen. Emily Rose, who was elected to replace Guerero, said although Guerero worked hard, he no longer represented the views of the student budget committee.

Town, University ask, 'Who gives who more'?

By MICHAEL ALCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

Threats of a $203,000 lawsuit over disputed speeding ticket collections from 1984 and $100,000 in ambulance and fire fees have University and Amherst officials caught up in 'finger-pointing' as to who gives who more money.

The town's attempts to cover a $2 million budget deficit have officials straining traditionally friendly relations between the town and the University of Massachusetts.

"Yes, there is increased tension, because since 1988 the town and us have been strapped for funds," Director of University Relations Jamie Chernoff said.

The $203,000 in speeding tickets were given on University roads by the University's police forces. It is apparently unclear, however, where the funds should go. The collected ticket money was sent to the clerk magistrate's office in Northampton for arbitration.

"Maybe if the magistrate office had kept better records this dispute might not have been necessary," Chernoff said.

"We are now waiting for an opinion from the attorney general, but should he decide against the town we would not be legally bound by that decision. A lawsuit would have to be the next step," Amherst Town Manager Barry Del Castilho said.

Town meeting member Larry Kelley was quoted in the Union-News as supporting a lawsuit to extract funds from the University that the town "is owed" the money by the University.

Kelley has petitioned for the town to pursue the $203,000 as part of this year's Town Meeting, which is occurring this week and next. Kelley's petition, article 28 on the Town Meeting Agenda, should come up some time next week.

Kelley maintains that the town should hire legal counsel to pursue the matter as quickly as possible, noting that "time is money and we need that money now."

Town officials note that the University benefits private stores and restaurants in Amherst which do not directly help the municipal government.

"The town used to get $400,000 in lieu of taxes from the University," Select Board Member Carylon Holstein said. "It should be more, but a year ago we only got $87,000 of that money... this year there was nothing."

Holstein said there are approximately 130 Amherst public school students whose parents are University students and do not pay local taxes.

These University students need to live in UMass dormitories, Lincoln or North Village residencies to be tax exempt, and the town of Amherst pays about $780,000 to educate these children.

"You should not bite the hand that feeds you... there is so much that the University does for the town," Select Board Member Dave Keenan said.

Keenan said he felt the budget problems should not be allowed to ruin what he described as what has generally been a mutually beneficial relationship between the University and the town.

Chernoff pointed to land donations and road repairs as past examples of University cooperation with Amherst.

"We have donated the sewage plant in Hadley, the land for the fire house on East Pleasant Street, and the Mark's Meadow school building," Chernoff said.

Chernoff said the University has also paid $500,000 to help pay for road repairs the town needed in order to comply with Massachusetts disability act requirements.

Besides the $203,000 in contested speeding ticket money, ambulance and fire department fees for the University totaling $100,000 are suggested as possible sources of revenue on a list submitted to the Select Board by Del Castilho.

Chernoff noted that the University does it fair share regarding fires and that an excessive ambulance fee may force the University to attempt to maintain its own ambulance force.

"I would point out that most of the volunteer force for the fire house are UMass students... the University has its own on-call fire force and has reduced its false alarms by 40 percent this year," Chernoff said. "And if the ambulance fees proposed are too high, it might be cheaper for us to maintain our own ambulance force."

"In essence, what it boils down to is give and take," said School Board Chairperson Doris Cruz. "Fighting won't help."

Another satisfied customer...

"I was riding along on my cool mountain bike, when I suddenly decided that I didn't really want to ride a bike any more and that I would really like a guitar. I put an ad in the Collegian, and someone called the first day to buy my bike. And, when I was looking through the Collegian classifieds, I saw the guitar of my dreams. Minorities develop own elitism

The University of Massachusetts bills itself as a multicultural community. Despite the time, attention and money spent to foster this image, the University remains racially and culturally divided. Not only do the cultural values of White society dominate the academic and social life of this campus, but within the minority community, division and internecine strife abound.

UMass has fallen victim to the forms of ethnic, cultural and racial divisions that threaten the lives of Bosnians, Palestinians and Kurds. Yet we should not be surprised that racism and ethnocentrism continue to flourish in our community; the world is a violent place, and is filled with hatred. What is surprising is the collaboration of the minorities on this campus with the divisive tactics of the majority/White community. Not only have minority organizations bought the message that Blacks and other minorities are inferior, they have fallen for this lie so wholeheartedly that they have developed their own elitism. Somehow not content with being excluded from the power and social structures of White society, certain minority organizations have turned to excluding other minority groups from what little power non-Whites have on this campus.

This behavior directly contributes to the disempowerment and diminishment of the rights and status of all minorities at our university and in our nation. The kind of elitism and exclusionary tactics that prevail at UMass are reminiscent of the Black-on-Black violence that characterizes the United States, South Africa or the participation of the Arab states in the slaughter of hundreds of thousands of Iraqis in the neocolonialist Gulf War.

Rather than permit ourselves to be divided and to engage in infighting, we should take as our motto the slogan of the Pan-African Congress: "None of us are free until all of us are free." Rather than quibble over who is more truly a person of color, African-Americans, Africans, Latino/as, Asians or Native Americans, we should recognize and be proud that people of color are the majority in this world.

White oppression created the label of difference. The White power structure is so dependent upon exclusion that even within White society groups are the victims of deathly discrimination. Every day, Irish Catholics die for their right to be free in a so-called democratic nation, Great Britain. When we focus on the difference between blue and gold, brown and gold, purple and gold, pink and green, black and gold, blue and white or crimson and cream, we buy the line that exclusion on the basis of color is acceptable. No exclusion is acceptable, and until the minority organizations are included in all so-called minority community events, the order of the day will be divide and rule, rather than our ideal which is UMOJA.

A revelation of evolution

Well, well, well. Less than a month to go and I'm through with this place. Out of here. Who knew.

So what has changed? Change is something you have in your pocket. Evolution, however, is a process that slowly but surely affects the way we adapt to our surroundings. UMass will never change. But it will continue to evolve. Its students will evolve as well — I certainly have.

Greg
SUKIENNIK

Take the administration — please. Believe it or not, kids, the current crop at Whitmore is far and away an improvement over the bureaucrats of four years ago. Student-friendly types like Tom Robinson were nowhere to be found. Indeed, students faced the likes of Dennis "Denny" Madson, who avoided talking to student leaders like they were the plague and slashed the budget of the Everywoman's Center into teeny bits. His departure was mourned by few.

It took four years, but the University is finally starting to get the message that it is here to serve us. The combative attitudes that used to lord over Housing and Student Activities, for example, have been ushered out and replaced with those far more sympathetic to students' needs. This, four years after Housing proposed a police substation in Washington Tower and a chain link fence surrounding Southwest.

However, there's one thing about top administrators at this school that every student should remember. They are accountable to the Board of Trustees, not us. There are still officials at this school who believe the following quote, as taken from one of them: "Remember, the University signs my paycheck."

Look at the chancellor selection process. Do you think the trustees want someone with a spine who's going to stick up for us? No way. They want a "yes" person, as in "Yes, I'll let you raise tuition and fees" or "Yes, I'll do what I can to make sure the Legal Services Office never gets litigation back." Hate to burst your bubble, and I sincerely hope I'm wrong, but that's the way it goes when a pack of "private citizens" with no accountability to anyone but themselves is allowed to run things.

Good luck, Dave 'n' Al. You've got your work cut out for you.

As UMass has evolved, so have I. Four years ago the powers that be stuck me in James Residence Hall — the armpit of UMass before it was condemned and converted from all-male to all-female housing.

The day I moved in, it still reeked of beer and urine. No lie. The guys on the other side of the hall threw their garbage into the hallway once and made their own 10 pin set with Knickerbocker bottles and a lacrosse ball. Then they pennied their resident assistant in his room and set the door on fire. That was just first semester.

My second year I thought about transferring, especially if the Citizens for Limited Taxation rollback passed. But as much as I love chicken wings and the Bills, SUNY-Buffalo just wouldn't have been the same. And I would've never seen the Minutemen return to the NCAA tournament. What a shame that would've been.

So yeah, I stayed. And I'm glad I did. I've gotten a lot of strange looks for the fact that I've lived in Southwest all four years of my college career. Sure, if the circumstances had been different I would've moved off. But if I had it to do all over again I still would've done things exactly the same way. No regrets.

Hmm. That's a good thought to end on.

We should not pay for the perks

Athletic Director Robert Marcum has decided to ban non-varsity students from Boyden Gymnasium's weight room 1, commonly known as the "new weight room." Marcum has perhaps forgotten that he works for all University students at a public institution where elitism is not acceptable.

The new weight room is the only facility on campus with modern, well-maintained equipment. Four hours a day are currently set aside there for varsity athletes only. Remaining time is split between gym classes and free periods for all students, including varsity athletes. In fact, so many students utilize these free periods that the dilapidated "old weight room" is opened to absorb the overflow.

Furthermore, the new weight room daily serves more non-varsity students than varsity athletes.

Athletic fees are steep enough without the added insult of varsity programs squirreling away utilities which rightfully belong to all University students. Varsity athletes comprise a small portion of the University population, and it is simply unfair for them to receive perks directly at other students' expense.

With enough protest from concerned students and support from University officials, this breach in ethics can be reversed before it is implemented next semester.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

After three semesters writing notes, it's time to pass the throne, (or stool) on to someone else. I figured my final entry would be a good place to explain a little about the column, myself and the oneness we have become.

"Notes from the Campus Center Basement" has been a fixture of the Collegian editorial page since the '80s. The format, disjointed musings on student life in Amherst, stuck and has been passed on through a succession of writers, some more twisted and successful than others. During my tenure, I've attempted to add acidity and a bit of consistency to the somewhat irregular column. Just what this constipated institution needs.

Two weeks ago, an uninitiated writer asked why the column was always so cynical. For me, it's a relief in an environment where a dark sense of humor and an appreciation for the absurd are valuable survival tools. I know I'm not the only one who appreciates ironies, such as that earlier this semester, a student in a wheelchair was hit by a Occupational Safety and Health Administration car, or that a Vermont Ben and Jerry's facility was fined for illegal waste disposal.

UMass, replete with such embarrassing crises, has provided an excellent target: big and slow moving.

Imagine the chancellor on the bridge of the (old) Enterprise, relying on spin doctor Ric Townes and damage control artist Grant Ingle to hold it all together. Smoke billows, the bridge rocks. At the helm, Jo-Anne Vanin and Joseph Zanini maintain course unchanged. It's not a bad analogy, they're all poor actors.

The University is a victim of institutional momentum and "solves" problems by forming committees, getting feedback, and, on occasion, printing "ally" buttons. You can promise students anything in five years, knowing that by that time, few will care or remember. Tell them anything — as long as you get the building back.

Josh
REYNOLDS

Contradicting its rhetoric about tolerance and flexibility, the University found chalk, scrawled on the Student Union steps April 20, so threatening that Campus Center staff washed it away, rather than waiting for the following day's rain. I wonder if they wore their "ally" pins. Why don't they concentrate on more costly computer thieves, or lemon snatchers?

The Legal Services Center once represented students in court. Free. Students, often unaware of their rights, transient and at an economic disadvantage, were able to take action against better established parties, such as landlords, and the University. After losing several cases, the trustees, rather than change the policies that kept getting them sued, de-fanged the office by removing its powers of litigation.

Today if you take your case to the Legal Services Center, you can talk to one of the student-funded lawyers who still work there. They'll say, "You're right, you've been stiffed. You should hire a lawyer."

Unfortunately, students are just as self-defeating. Student government at UMass, once at the head of the student empowerment movement, was razed by the early '90s. Guy Glodis, Ted Maravelious, and other fiery young freedom fighters of the Reagan Revolution, fought communists such as Jason Rabinowitz (who drove a BMW his dad bought him), precluding any constructive activity, and tearing down much of the framework in the process. Now, with graduate students organized and fighting for their interests, undergraduate student government is just starting to pull itself from the ashes, trying to reclaim the powers Whitmore usurped during their incompetence.

Hopefully, I've provided a bit more humor and historical context to this sometimes dry, high fiber medium, and instilled an appreciation for the Valley's provincial perversity that you couldn't get rehashing the Thomas hearings, Gulf War or Clinton's attorney general search in your obligatory interdisciplinary class (You thought the "I" stood for "indoctrination"?).

Since Marc Elliott and I graduate in May, flushed from this crucible of higher learning into the sewer beyond, some aspiring newcomer will leave their notes on the wall. The best any of us can do is wash our hands on the way out.

Good intentions are easily marred by deplorable methods

A lot of things only last four years: most presidencies, a good sweater, car payments, too many marriages, physics exam-induced headaches and the stay of the average student at UMass-Amherst. From multiculturalism to massive bureaucracy, in their four years students learn lessons from many texts — but mostly from the age-old text of life experience.

Far from being an ivory tower, UMass and Amherst will send graduates home with many "real life" experiences (Now I know when people talk about "public institutions," they mean that institution is owned and run by the state, not that it is open to the public. Consider "public university"). The Valley isn't an escape from the real world. It's the real world from a different direction. Hypocrisy is hypocrisy and wrong is wrong no matter what the ideology.

During my stay I've grown more and more critical of fellow liberals and their practices and even more critical of radicals. Perhaps it's because I'd like my team to take the moral high ground and shun the methods practiced by demagogues and reactionaries.

I'd hope my readers would lose some of the faith they have in me, if I tried to boster the political career of one of drinking buddies by prostituting my position as a Collegian columnist. Ethics and class aren't just for other people.

Let's take the Maoists for starters (or let's not). They advocate the elimination of sexism, racism and homophobia, a respectable and noble goal. But to this end, they advocate censorship and the overthrow of the democratic system, presumably by violent means, for the benefit of "the people."

Marc
ELLIOTT

Now which people are they talking about? All people or just the people that agree with them? Surely they would be upset if people opposing them tried to silence them and shut down their printing presses. Why else would they reinforce their leaflets with so much masking tape? They must be afraid of censorship. Yet, they advocate the use of censorship by telling people they should work to shut down Amherst's most popular scapegoat, the media. Besides, why bother with violence? Violence only hurts and never helps.

The campus multiculturalists aren't much better. Consider the recent "Multicultural Musings" advertisement (paid by the University/you) published in the Monday Collegian. The tirade this month comes from Joyce Avrech Berkman, a history professor. She has lots of questions about her role in the multicultural community; but knows for certain that those afraid of multicultural education turning into multicultural indoctrination merely have "less inclusive notions of social justice" and want to defend their "intolerance." Maybe. But maybe they have a point. I know of an anthropology class in which students can get extra credit by writing to state legislators in support of a certain bill (Yes, I'm going to take the extra credit, but at least I'm being honest). The professor calls this "applied anthropology." No matter how great this bill is, students are still being bribed for their political support. How long until their votes are graded?

Then there are those marvelous anti-United States (colonialism), pro-Third World (military dictatorships) revolutionaries. You know, the ones who advocate building monuments to genocide-practitioner Saddam Hussein. In January, the Northampton memorial for U.S. soldiers who died in foreign wars was defaced with the slogan "100,000 Iraqis dead." Defacing memorials is a practice usually more common among skinheads during Holocaust Memorial Week than anti-war champions of the Third World. Some activity is deplorable no matter who does it, or the intention behind it.

Maybe we could all learn a few of the lessons around us and make that "no peace, no justice." After all, how can there be justice without first having peace? Remember, hypocrisy is hypocrisy no matter what the ideology (try it in a sing-song voice, it sort of rhymes).

Fighting fire with fire just gets everyone burned. Imagine if the fire department tried it.

Candidate responds to criticism

In light of Emily J. Isaac's article on the Op/Ed page of the April 1993 issue of the Graduate Voice, I feel somewhat compelled to explain myself. First and foremost, it has never been my contention that last year's budgetary increase was anything less than a collective effort involving undergrads, grads, administrators, faculty and staff. I was but a single player on the team.

Secondly, I am fully aware that all achievements and inroads I personally may have made in the political process were but for the strength of the organization behind me. But the fact remains that I was the sole consistent advocate from the Graduate Employees' Organization. I tried to choose my words carefully for my flyer; I was an "instrumental" player because I was the conduit through which the power of the GEO, United Auto Workers and UMass flowed.

I hope Ms. Isaacs can forgive this unintentional offense. She does, I think, recognize that my efforts on behalf of the GEO were very successful; in fact, she worked very closely with me toward the end of the budget season as she led the negotiations that landed a $1,000 raise. Furthermore, she argues that I am "hard-working, talented and. . . both committed and finds personal value in the work" I am doing. All of these qualities, it seems to me, make for an excellent Graduate Student Senate president.

March a capitalist's dream

The March on Washington for Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Civil Rights was a capitalist's dream. People selling T-shirts, pins, posters, flags, freedom rings, hot dogs, and soda were everywhere, raking in the cash. Walking down the mall, I accumulated flyers and order forms. One asked me to remember the march by purchasing an official commemorative video. Another said to "come to AT&T" because they were donating money to gay and lesbian organizations.

Melanie
DESILVA

For big business and individual entrepreneurs, the march was not as much about human rights as it was about increasing profits. Washington D.C. made a lot of money last weekend. From restaurants to hotels, from the park and ride to the Smithsonian, somebody was getting rich, and it wasn't the man who took my $5 at the cash register in the Aerospace museum restaurant.

Whether a rainy uneventful afternoon, or a sunny, profitable march day, the people who tucked the green away in a metal box for their bosses still took home the same miserable minimum wage. Thousands of low wage workers in D.C. last Sunday were forced to bust their butts just to make everybody else but themselves rich.

With the '80s proving beyond a reasonable doubt that trickle down economics generates poverty, the argument that an increase in the city's profits for one weekend will benefit all workers across the board is capitalist hogwash in its most blatant form. Certainly some individual poor people made more money Sunday, like waitresses or the homeless man I gave a dollar to, but in the aggregate the event just made the rich richer.

Yet the event was not as one dimensional as I have made it sound. It was also a race issue. I was very conscious of the fact that the majority of people who served me, a White person, in D.C. were people of color. The woman at the Chinese restaurant, the man driving the bus, the woman who put cream cheese on my bagel, the Asian woman I bought my flag from that was made in Taiwan, added a little international exploitation.

There was very little talk about class issues at the march. Neither was there an acknowledgment that amidst the liberatory atmosphere of the march, working class people and people of color were being exploited. Speakers addressed race, ethnicity and gender, neglecting class — an equally important type of oppression.

Maybe class oppression was overlooked or ignored because most of the people in attendance were middle to upper class themselves. (I'm just speculating.)

I watched well-dressed men and women wearing pink triangles buy and buy and buy. Poor people do not have the freedom to do that. I glanced at the weekend's schedule of events to find that celebration dinners were planned for Saturday and Sunday evenings in downtown Washington. How much were the tickets? $250-$400.

It was a wonderful weekend, don't get me wrong. It was one of the most liberating experiences of my life. But I was there because I had class privilege. I had access to transportation. I could afford to take time off from work. I had enough money to pay for cheap food, gas, a token pin and flag and tolls. All together, my partner and I paid $80 in gas and tolls alone.

My partner is working class. He survives on temp work and food stamps. He was one of the lucky working class supporters of gay rights. When we stopped at a small market in Maryland for lunch, my partner was told, "I'm sorry, but we don't take food stamps." We had to search for a larger supermarket.

The thousands of poor lesbians, gays and bisexuals who could not go because they had to feed themselves and their families; who don't own cars; who had to work the weekend shift to pay medical bills, should have been addressed.

Although the march was wonderful and liberating for people in the gay, lesbian, and bisexual community who were privileged enough to be able to scrape together the money to attend, the fact class issues were not addressed, and the fact working class and people of color were being oppressed last weekend because of the nature of capitalism, shouldn't be ignored.

Campus man and divorce

When I first heard my friend say it, I was shocked. I was angered that someone could be so naive about such a subject and voice their opinion about it. Being told that you are from a "broken" home is the stupidest thing someone can ever say to a person whose parents are divorced.

Adam Scott
ROBERTS

By no means was my home slashed in two and "broken" into pieces. A divorce can be said to be a life lesson. No one, absolutely no one knows what it is like or can understand what transpires during and after a divorce but the people involved. Unless you experience it in your own family you will never understand how much one's life changes because of a divorce.

I always tell people that a divorce is a never-ending nightmare. A divorce is never final; the battles continue with child support payments, medical payments, alimony, college tuition and the list goes on.

I remember being in eighth grade and thinking that everyone in the world drove a Porsche and a Mercedes, that everyone had a summer house on the Cape and that everyone wintered in Florida suburbs. I enjoyed living in that sheltered world. But now that things have changed, I know the reality of life and the value of a dollar. The divorce opened my eyes to the real world and I learned to get out of that sheltered suburban world that I knew so well.

As my old self, I was "just living the life," as they say in Hollywood. However, the divorce changed me for the better. I became driven and ambitious and I swore that nothing was ever going to get in my way. What I want, is what I will get. Power. Aggrandizements. Opulence.

I became more outspoken and blunt, never afraid to voice my opinion. I became a new person each day and had to remain strong. I remember my mother saying to my brother and sister and myself, "United we stand, divided we fall." By no means were we a broken family. My mother kept us together and strong for survival. That is what life is about. Survival.

The divorce was a low in my life. If I could survive that experience I can handle anything. I know many of the people that I come in contact with have similar feelings about divorce and they too have become more self-sufficient and driven and successful.

I believe many children of divorced parents take on outspoken, somewhat overwhelming personalities. It is that feeling of invincibility, of survival. The "this isn't going to stop me in my tracks" philosophy. Nothing can harm you. You can take away all those material objects and have nothing but I say, "No one can ever take away your dignity." If you've got your dignity, you've got it all.

Family unity is very important in the survival of a divorce. I always get stopped in my tracks when I hear Bette Midler, from Beaches, singing "You've got to give a little, take a little, and then the whole world takes a little, that's the glory, that's the glory of love." This song represents family love to me.

My parents' divorce scarred me for life. It is like burning your hand: at first it hurts, but slowly the pain goes away. However, you will always have that scar to remind you of that pain. Remember the past. Live the present. Trust the future.

Sexual harassment is no joke

It's funny I'm writing this letter because I just did a paper on this subject in women's studies. This incident I am about to tell you is true. It is not to meant to insult any men, only make those to whom it applies be aware.

Friday night, April 23, I went to the Funkothon with a few friends. Outside the Student Union Ballroom I was practically the only Caucasian woman in the crowd of people waiting to get into the dance. Everyone knows how crowds are. You are pushed and shoved while you stand in line. Well, as I was walking out, I had to stop and wait for some other students to go by. While I was standing there, an African-American man walked by me, stopped, looked me up and down and reached his hand down to my crotch and grabbed me. This all happened so quickly! The other students in the crowd who saw this may have thought that this man's actions did not bother me because I kept walking. In reality, I tried to turn around and hit him. I also used some foul language, the kind that cannot be printed.

To top this off, a group of women laughed at his repulsive actions. They laughed! Why? Have they bought into the system? This system in which women must laugh at these kinds of actions instead of rebelling? What if it were one of them? It would have been real funny then, huh? I was mortified, confused and angry all at once. I did not know what to do. I ended up running back to my dorm. As soon as I saw a friend I burst into tears. I felt so dirty.

Why out of all the women there did he choose me? Was it because I was one of the few White women in the crowd of people? Whether or not this attack was racial or not, the fact is he did it and got away with it. This is just a minor incident. I do not know the statistics, but I do know that a high percentage of rapes and sexual harassment on this campus are not even reported. Many times women do not even know that they are a victim of some sort of sexual harassment or abuse.

Please, to all the women who can relate, speak out! I should have followed that sad case of a man, but I was too scared. And one more thing, to the man who did this to me: quit using women as scapegoats for your male repressed desires. If you want to get off, go in a corner and use the hand you write with!

constructed in 1963.

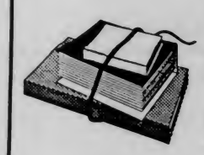
While attempting to complete his construction plan, Lederle encountered a difficult obstacle. The state Legislature, concerned the University was becoming too big for its own good, levied a building ban in the late-'60s stating that no new buildings could be constructed.

Lederle and his architects found a way around this barrier by redesigning their buildings as additions to existing structures. Herter Hall (connected to Bartlett by an underground tunnel) was referred to as Bartlett East after its construction in 1968. Marcus Lab was attached to Marston, Hasbrouck, Chenoweth, Goodell, and Goessman additions were constructed instead of separate buildings. The Campus Center was attached to the Student Union in 1969. Whitmore and the Fine Arts Center were joined to Herter Hall by service tunnels in 1969 and 1971 respectively. And probably the most profound example of this practice is the addition to Old South College in 1972, which we now call the Tower Library.

Lederle was the last UMass president to hold office here at the UMass campus. After the construction of UMass-Boston in 1970, the president's office was moved there to demonstrate support and impartiality.

Enrollment during the '70s leveled off, and it has remained about the same ever since. With the exception of Sylvan Area in the mid '70s, essentially no new construction would occur during the next two decades.

On Thursday April 29, UMass celebrates its 130th anniversary. Looking forward from here, it would seem that the University is on the brink of a new era. The large scale construction that has taken place recently (Knowles Engineering, the Mullins Arena, and the Polymer Research Center) is in radical contrast to the calm of the '80s.



What is a Textbook Buyback?

Three times during each semester the Textbook Annex brings in a wholesaler to buy textbooks from students. Wholesalers are in the business of selling used books to colleges and universities across the country. Therefore, in determining how much they will pay a student for a book they must consider the demand for that book as well as the shipping and handling costs involved in processing and reselling the book. This is why prices vary and indeed change frequently. Generally only current editions have value.

The best time to sell books is at the end of the semester. At that time the Annex will pay 50% of the new price for a book if we have an order for that book for the following semester and we need to purchase copies. If we do not, the wholesaler may make you an offer.

If you have questions please ask the people doing the buyback or the Annex staff. They will be more than happy to answer your questions and give you any tips that may be applicable to your situation.

*A Picture ID is Required for all Buyback Transactions.

When is the next Textbook Buyback?

The end of the semester Textbook Buyback is:

First of Framingham 8 freed by Gov. Council

By JOSE MARTINES
Associated Press

BOSTON — The Governor's Council voted to free convicted murderer Eugenia Moore on Wednesday, the first of the so-called Framingham Eight to be freed.

Moore, 34, and the seven other women were convicted of slaying mates they claim were abusive. However, the women were not allowed to use battered women's syndrome as a defense at their trials.

The council voted 6-3 to commute the life sentence Moore began serving at MCI Framingham in February 1986 following her second-degree murder conviction in the death of Alfred Phillips. She was transferred to a minimum security prison in Lancaster last fall.

"Thank you, Jesus," said Johnny Mae Calhoun, Moore's cousin, as they left the council's chamber. "I'm delighted. I prayed for this so long that I don't know what to say."

Moore, a former bus driver for the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, said her ex-boyfriend stalked and abused her. Moore's attorney, Susan Howards, said the mother of three could be freed within six to eight weeks.

"Certainly we have sympathy for the Phillips family, there was a loss there," Howards said outside the statehouse. "But for Eugeina Moore justice has finally been served.

The three council members who voted against commutation said they did not believe Moore's story.

"I don't think Eugeina Moore fits the mold of battered women's syndrome," Counsilor David F. Constantine said prior to the vote. "I don't feel everytime someone spits in your face, that everytime someone threatens to kill you that it gives you the right to go out and kill that person."

However, the majority disagreed.

"She was hunted down and attacked at her job at the MBTA. The MBTA police refused to arrest Phillips because it was — quote — a domestic dispute," said Councilor Dorothy A. Kelly Gay.

She said that Moore was victimized by a legal system that failed to protect her and then failed to accept her defense at trial as a battered woman.

"She was not afforded protections that are now mandated by law," Gay said.

Moore said Phillips began harassing her hours before she fatally stabbed him on June 6, 1985.

According to Moore's testimony, Phillips was unhappy when she ordered him to remove his belongings from her apartment in February 1985. She said Phillips had been leaving clothes and other items at her apartment as a gradual attempt to move in.

Moore said Phillips accosted her at work aboard a bus she was driving, spat in her face, punched her in the stomach and ripped her shirt. MBTA police responded to the call, but Phillips was not arrested.

Moore took a break at home, she said, putting a knife in her pocket before going grocery shopping. Phillips surprised her at her car, Moore said, and pressed something against her back.

Moore said she must have stabbed him then, although she doesn't remember.

Councilor Robert B. Kennedy opposed commuting Moore's sentence. He said he would have voted differently had the governor asked for a reduction in Moore's sentence to make her eligible for parole. Had she been convicted of voluntary manslaughter, she would have been eligible for parole by now, he said.

But Kennedy said he did not believe Moore should be freed outright because she has refused to enroll in any programs aimed at helping battered women and has demonstrated no remorse over the stabbing.

when they gave Phoenix the third overall pick for the Cards' fourth pick, and thousand-yard man Johnny Johnson. The Cardinals drafted Garrison Hearst, Georgia's outstanding running back, while the Jets got Johnson, and picked linebacker Marvin Jones, who they were going to pick with the third selection anyway.

Phoenix is not stupid, though. Apparently they wanted to get rid of Johnson's contract, and who can argue with an offense of Steve Beurlein, Gary Clark, and now Garrison Hearst? Phoenix also drafted Earnest Dye in the first round, the 330-pound offensive lineman from South Carolina, who will pave the way for Hearst on his touchdown scampers.

The University of Notre Dame was the leading college, having seven players taken in the first four rounds. Rick Mirer was the second overall pick, and will play quarterback for the Seahawks. Fullback Jerome Bettis went tenth to the L.A. Rams, Washington selected cornerback Tom Carter with the seventeenth pick, and Irv Smith went to the Saints, as the twentieth pick in the opening round.

Alabama, which fielded the top defense in the country last year, had three defensive players selected in the first round, and five taken in the first four rounds.

The Jets-Phoenix trade was not the only deal this weekend. Last Saturday night, New Orleans traded All-World linebacker Pat Swilling to Detroit for first and fourth round picks. Swilling should sure up a Lions' defense that just lost Jerry Ball to Cleveland.

The Minnesota Vikings have not had a first round pick since the Reagan Administration was in power, courtesy of Herschel Walker, and they seem a bit rusty. The Purple People used the 21st pick to select Ohio State running back Robert Smith. Smith quit football after his freshman year to concentrate on his medical studies.

He decided to play again, after sitting out his sophomore season. After a good fall, Smith gave up his final year of eligibility for the NFL. He quit football for school, now he is quitting school for football. Can you say hypocrite?

In the second round, the Vikes selected wide receiver Quadry Ismail. "The Missle" was a projected second or third rounder, and was selected 52nd, while projected first round receiver Andre Hastings was still on the board.

Speaking of receivers, the Miami Dolphins pulled a big surprise by selecting Penn State's O.J. McDuffie in the first round. McDuffie joins the Marks brothers (Clayton, Duper, and Ingram), Irving Fryar, and seven other wideouts on the Miami roster. It looks like the Fish are eliminating the running back, and installing a five receiver, "throw and shoot" offense. This offense is expected to throw more passes than Sam Malone.

The NFL pre-season is right around the corner, plus free agency and the draft have shaken up lineups like never before. Phoenix and New York are vastly improved, the Dolphins finally have a quality receiver, and most importantly, New England is laying down the cornerstones for future success.

highlighted by Nichols' two-out, two-run double.

The offense was not at a loss for production as Nichols (2-for-5, 2 RBI), junior first baseman Rachel Lawson (3-for-4, 2 runs scored), Dondarski (2-for-4), freshman designated player Michelle Shaw (3-for-4, 2 RBI), and sophomore right fielder Jenn Salisbury (2-for-4, run scored) were all key contributors.

The offense wasn't the only thing that started out hot for Sortino, though, as senior righthander Darlene Claffey retired the first 11 Lady Friars she faced. Claffey improved her record to 9-6 for the season by scattering five hits, issuing one walk, and striking out four — including the last two to end the ballgame.

The Minutewomen travel to the University of Hartford today to take on the Lady Hawks in a doubleheader. UMass will next be home this weekend when Florida St., South Florida, and the University of Connecticut head north to participate in the Diamond Classic, being held Saturday and Sunday at Totman Field.

Another satisfied customer...

"I was riding along on my cool mountain bike, when I suddenly decided that I didn't really want to ride a bike any more and that I would really like a guitar. I put an ad in the Collegian, and someone called the first day to buy my bike. And, when I was looking through the Collegian classifieds, I saw the guitar of my dreams. I sold my bike and went to buy the guitar. Thank you Collegian!"

Taking the LSAT?

THINK your way to the right answer.

THINKING VS. CRACKING

Other companies say that you can ace the LSAT with gimmicks and short cuts—and a trick called "cracking." They're wrong. On the LSAT, you will not be rewarded for cracking. You will be rewarded for thinking.

To get your highest possible LSAT score, you must:

Discern the point and logic of arguments. Explain what you read. Understand how rules can order and limit the universe. Construct a written position.

These are the thinking skills required of a legal mind. Skills tested by the LSAT. Skills taught by Kaplan. And only Kaplan.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A love relationship regains its former luster. A business plan has great potential. Taking a look back will help you see ahead. Be a tower of strength to a friend in need.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accept a reward graciously but remember that inner satisfaction means more than public recognition. As the warm weather approaches, you will be able to spend more time outdoors with friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Communication or transportation snags are likely. Allow for delays and clarify your position to those awaiting word. Show the deserving you are willing to help them.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The key to career progress is showing initiative. Stop trying to unload your duties onto other's shoulders. A financial expert makes helpful suggestions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Set priorities and refuse to let minor interruptions throw you off-stride. An older relative is demanding. Offer to help outside of office hours. A special friendship could lead to happy romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Financial transactions should go well today. Team effort helps improve the bottom line. A stranger appears. Romance is in the air. You can make a huge difference in a loved one's life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Career and home demands could come into conflict now. If your feelings confuse you, try to go by the facts and figures. Stand apart from a tense situation; things will improve by nightfall.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A new outfit will attract admiring glances. Your associate sees you in a different light, day light and s/he likes that too. Act confident. Nothing will stand in the way of success if you believe in yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Others share your need for affection and appreciation. Thank someone who has done you favors in the past. Make amends to a loved one you may have neglected while pursuing your career.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lucky factors are at work where your career is concerned. Any extra effort you make on the job will be rewarded. Someone in authority decides to become your mentor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good news comes your way in an unusual manner. Share the gladtidings with loved ones. Hard work wins you praise and success. Do not be a pushover for love.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Curb a tendency to overreact or act on impulse. Financial speculation is risky and romance could prove elusive. When cool and collected, your timing improves.

Crew club heads to New Englands with women's squads on a roll

By HARRY HOROWITZ
Collegian Correspondent

Once again, this weekend, the University of Massachusetts crew club proved itself a force to be reckoned with as it claimed victory over Williams and Ithaca Colleges in Pittsfield, Mass. With impressive showings from all squads, UMass crew will be the team to watch next week at the New England Championships.

The comeback of the week goes to the varsity heavyweight men, who bounced back after being defeated by Coast Guard Academy last week to beat Williams by eight seconds. The varsity lightweight boat didn't fare as well, as it was beaten by both Ithaca and Williams, after leading the race for the first half.

The UMass women's squads are undefeated and have proven to be the most successful this season. The varsity and junior varsity women rowed to victory yet again, and are highly ranked in next week's competition. They both managed to win by over eight seconds, which is above the normal average in crew competition.

For the second straight season, the coach of the novice women, Mary Lockyer, produced a winning team. Lockyer's team last year captured a gold at the New England Championships.

At the rate the boat is going now, Lockyer said she is confident that her team will make her proud next week. Last week, the first novice eight swept Coast Guard, proving its dominance was no fluke, according to Lockyer.

"The novice are happy to end their season on a winning note," Lockyer said. "They are looking forward to the New Englands."

Under the leadership of John Jones, the novice men finally came into their own on Saturday by beating both Williams and Ithaca in heavyweight and lightweight races. Jones has been successful in creating a winning team out of what was once very raw talent.

With little funding from the University, UMass crew has beaten the odds and come out winners. The team will competing at the New Englands next week in Worcester, and the members said they hope when the smoke rises, they'll be wearing the gold.

winner of the Detroit/Toronto series.

Toronto leads Detroit 3-2. This is the marquee series of the playoffs. Detroit took games one and two in commanding fashion, but Toronto stormed back for victories in games three, four and five. With the folding of the Blackhawks, the winner of this series will make a strong run for the Campbell conference title.

Smythe Division

Vancouver leads Winnipeg 3-2. The Pavel Bure versus Teemu Selanne battle looks like it will go to the Russian Rocket. The Canucks have played superbly, anchored by the stellar goal tending of Kirk McLean. The Canucks appear ready to wrap this one up to move on to play the winner of the Kings and Flames.

Los Angeles leads Calgary 3-2. Goalie Robb Stauber has kept the Kings alive through the scoring drought of Gretzky and Robataille. The big guns found their scoring touches in game five as the Kings overwhelmed Calgary 9-4. The Kings hope to earn a trip to play the winner of Vancouver and Winnipeg.

Call it the year of the overtime. Thirteen games have already gone to sudden death. The record is 16 (1982) and the first round isn't even completed. The Islanders and Sabres will need to see this one broken in order to survive.

Millon scores seven as Gorillas romp

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

CHRISTOPHER EVANS / COLLEGIAN
The UMass men's lacrosse team faces off against Boston College yesterday on the Richard F. Garber Field defeating the overmatched Eagles 17 - 7. The Gorillas, on an eight game winning streak, will play against the Syracuse Orangemen this Saturday.

University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse attacker Mark Millon enjoyed his third seven-goal game of the 1993 season, propelling the Gorillas to a 17-7 romp over Boston College yesterday afternoon at Richard F. Garber Field.

Millon, who also notched seven goals against New Hampshire and Yale, collected six in the first half, then added a goal and an assist in the second as the Gorillas pulled away from the overmatched Eagles. UMass outscored BC 6-2 in the second quarter and 5-1 in the third, ensuring an eight-game win streak coming into Saturday's collision on the Hill with fourth-ranked Syracuse.

"If Mark Millon isn't [United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association] player of the year there's something wrong," said UMass coach Ted Garber.

Millon was by no means the only story for the Gorillas, who broke from recent form by not spotting BC a lead. Mike Valente assisted four scores and Wes Depp and Bill Edell added hat tricks for the Gorillas, who made BC goalies Victor Ianno (18 saves) and Keith Lillis (9) feel like they were on the wrong end of a game of Duck Hunt. The Gorillas put 44 of 53 shots on net.

Head Gorilla Ted Garber was pleased that Valente and Edell both figured in on the scoring for UMass.

"It's great that Billy Edell scored three for us today," Garber said. "And Mike Valente is a big part of this team. At first he was hot, then he went down and John Cavalerio got hot. Now Mike's back — they're a good duo out there for us."

In a break from what has become a familiar pattern of slow starts the last two weeks, the Gorillas scored early and often, with Millon setting the tone by scoring a hat trick in the first quarter. Boston College could not stop UMass in its set offense or its fast-break attack, giving up wide-open, easy scores. BC countered with a slow-down offense and physical defensive play, but to no avail.

Millon, who leads the nation in goals and points per game, then scored three consecutive goals in the second quarter — two assisted by Valente and one from Buddy Hoffman (1 goal, 1 assist), capping a 6-2 second quarter that put UMass up 11-4 and effectively ended the game.

On the other side of the field, the BC offense could not solve the solid play of the Gorilla close defense. The Eagles only scored off UMass defensive lapses, and when they did get off quality shots UMass goaltenders Tom LoPresti (7 saves, 4 goals), Rip Correnti (5 saves) and Morgan Stanford (1 save) were up to the challenge. LoPresti played the first half and Correnti and Stanford split the second.

The Gorillas left no doubt about the eventual outcome in the third quarter, outscoring BC 5-1. Edell and Depp found the back of the net twice, completing their hat tricks and allowing Garber to play his bench most of the third and all of the fourth.

But the story of the game was Millon, who continued his assault on the UMass record books. Millon's eight points gave him 199 for his career, placing him fourth on the all-time points list ahead of Lee Vosburgh. Millon also established a personal career high for points in a season, breaking last year's record of 46.

"The individual things don't mean much to me," Millon said. "I wasn't thinking about getting the eighth goal (Millon has scored seven four times, but never eight). It would've been nice."

Garber was pleased that the Gorillas came out fired up for Boston College, a team who has never beaten UMass in 20 tries. For example, UMass won 53 ground balls to BC's 39. But Garber also added that motivation shouldn't be a factor for his team.

"At this level the players have the responsibility to get themselves fired up to play," Garber said. "The great players get themselves ready to play."

For Boston College, who dropped to 7-6, Bill Oehmler and Laurens Goff both scored twice.

Softball sweeps PC, prepares for Hartford

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN
Sophomore Kelly Daut, the Atlantic 10 pitcher of the week.

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

If Providence College had any grand delusions of beating the University of Massachusetts softball team yesterday, the Minutewomen wasted little time in showing their hosts how wrong they were.

UMass (18-15 overall, 9-1 in the Atlantic 10) scored five runs in the top of the first inning in Game 1 and seven runs in the first in the nightcap, and rode these outbursts to a 8-0, 8-2 sweep of the Lady Friars.

"We played really well," said UMass head coach Elaine Sortino. "Our pitchers gave us strong performances, our defense was solid, and we hit the ball well."

The pitching was highlighted by sophomore Kelly Daut's two-hit shutout in the first game. Daut, who proved that her A-10 Pitcher of the Week award was no fluke, improved her record to 9-8 for the season by walking just one and striking out three in seven innings of work.

Daut was given all the runs she would need in the first as the Minutewomen took advantage of three PC errors to stake Daut to a five run lead. Senior third baseman Laurie Dondarski went 2-for-3 with three runs batted in to pace the torrid UMass offense.

Senior left fielder Stacey Nichols and catcher Sherri Kuchinskas also had multiple hit games as UMass pounded out 12 hits.

Game 2 was deja vu all over again as the Minutewomen wasted little time in attacking Lady Friar pitching. UMass banged out eight hits in the seven-run first-inning barrage,

Overtime dominates NHL playoffs

Sweeps, Sudden Death, and Ray Ferraro. Little has gone according to the script or ended in regulation in the NHL's first round.

Patrick Division

Islanders lead Washington 3-2. When they get past regulation, the Islanders are unbeatable, and the biggest hero in the extra period has been Ray "Sudden Death" Ferraro.

CROSSCHECKS By Matt Vautour

Ferraro leads the NHL with eight goals so far in the post season, but his real claim to fame has been in the extra periods. All three of the Islanders wins have come on overtime goals, and all three of those goals have had Ferraro's signature on it.

When Brian Mullen scored the winner in game two, it came off of a Ray Ferraro pass. Ferraro scored the winners himself in games three and four. Even in the losing effort of game five, Ferraro managed to score four more. If the Islanders advance deep into the playoffs (unlikely if they make it to Pittsburgh), Ray Ferraro could walk off with the Conn Smythe Trophy (playoff MVP).

This year's Isles-Caps match-up has convinced me that no matter what their records are, these two teams should be paired off in the first round of the playoffs every year. No other series provides as much excitement.

Pittsburgh eliminates New Jersey 4-1. Chris Terreri figured out a way to stop Pittsburgh in game four, but it proved to be too little, too late.

The Penguins, except for a temporary let down in game four dominated this series. The high powered offense and steady play of Tom Barrasso was too much for the Devils. The Penguins will take on the winner of the Islanders/Capitals series.

Adams Division

Buffalo sweeps Boston 4-0. Another team that has been loving OT is the Buffalo Sabres. Three of their four wins in the first round came in sudden death.

The Sabres finally broke their pattern of folding in April, and are peaking at the right time. Their once questionable defense completely shut down the Bruins, while their vaunted offense found the spark they were missing at the end of the season.

Maybe the Bruins were thinking prematurely about Pittsburgh. Anyway, Buffalo meets the winner of the Montreal/Quebec series.

Montreal leads Quebec 3-2. After dropping the first two games in Quebec, the Canadians took over. The turning point came in (you guessed it) overtime in game three when the Habs beat Ron Hextall for the victory. The winner will take on Buffalo next week.

Norris Division

St.Louis sweeps Chicago 4-0. Nobody could ever have predicted this one. The Blues barely even made the playoffs, and they always choke when they do get there. Craig Janney hasn't scored a clutch goal since youth hockey. So with recent history against them, a sweep of the defending champion Chicago Blackhawks seemed the furthest thing from reality.

Well, Craig Janney scored unassisted in overtime of game four to complete the sweep. The Blues will face the

New QB, fans for new Patriots

"The New England Patriots select Drew Bledsoe, quarterback, from Washington State."

When NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue made his announcement Sunday, football fans all over New England did something we haven't done since 1986: jumped on the Patriots' bandwagon.

Glen GOLAND

Not since John Hannah and Craig James powered the Pats offense has there been this much excitement in Foxborough. New uniforms, new coach, new quarterback, new attitude. The Patriots are on the right track, if they continue to improve over the next few years, they could go from being the team nobody respected to the team nobody could stop (i.e. Dallas Cowboys).

The Patriots sold 100 new season tickets on Sunday in just two hours. Get ready New England, the Bledsoe Bandwagon is here.

The Patriots got their man in Bledsoe, but the biggest winners in last weekend's draft were the Phoenix Cardinals and the J-E-T-S, Jets. This year's draft was filled with picks, trades, rumors, and plenty of surprises.

The New York Jets made the trade of the day

THE Flirtations

"The Flirtations," from left: Cliff Townsend, Jimmy Rutland, Aurelio Font and Jon Arterton

Collegian Staff

If you missed them at the March on Washington for Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transgender civil rights, the Flirtations, an all-gay-male a capella group, will be performing this Sunday in the Student Union Ballroom.

"We love UMass," said member Jon Arterton. "We always get a wonderful reception there."

Together for five years, the Flirtations have captured gay and straight audiences with their comedy and passion, singing everything from doo-wop to Peter Gabriel.

Representing different cross-sections of the gay population through the diverse backgrounds of group members, the Flirtations attract a broad audience and help to dispel stereotypes.

One came out when he was 37, one took his boyfriend to the high school prom, and one of the current members has AIDS.

With the recent success of openly lesbian entertainer Lea DeLaria, and the recent deluge of media attention being paid to gay issues, the Flirtations could potentially break into the mainstream.

But is that one of their goals as performers? Not necessarily; not if it means they would have to alter their style for heterosexual audiences, Arterton said.

"It's not a particular goal of ours. We're not about to adapt what we do to fit any kind of parameter. But people have told us that of all the gay and lesbian performers they've seen, we have the most potential for crossing over," he said.

So what is their goal as entertainers?

"If we empower our own people we will have done plenty. We could play for 1,000 straight people and sure they may be influenced somewhat, but if we sing for 1,000 gay people we will empower them to feel good about themselves and take action in our lives," Arterton said.

As they perform on Sunday, the Flirtations will unfortunately harmonize without their highest soprano, Michael Callen. Battling Karposi's Sarcoma, Callen graced the stage for the last time with his four friends at the March on Washington, stirring the crowd with a passionate solo.

This is the second time the Flirtations have had to face the potential death of a group member from AIDS. Soon after the release of their first album, group member T.J. Myers died of AIDS.

"We've been through this before and it's affecting us in all kinds of complex ways. To be losing Michael is very difficult. We're handling his illness in about as functional a way as possible," Arterton said. "In the time that he has had, he's forged on with his life, and has taken on all these challenges that he's always wanted to do."

Currently, Flirtation members are gathering film footage for a documentary film about the group entitled, The Fabulous Flirtations.

"[The documentary] is kind of in flux right now. Because of Michael's illness we've been more concerned with just getting things on tape. We have some wonderful footage," Arterton said.

Since 1989, the Flirtations, Arterton, Callen, Myers, Cliff Townsend, Aurelio Font, and Jimmy Rutland, have produced two albums, Imaginatively Enough: the Flirtations and Out on the Road.

The Flirtations will perform on May 2 at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are available in advance from the Program for Gay Lesbian Bisexual Concerns for $9 for students, $12 for non-students. [illegible] the door for $11 for students and $14 for non-students.

Bedroom Farce explodes with humor, insight

By SHAWN MCDONNELL
Collegian Staff

If someone other than Alan Ayckbourn had written Bedroom Farce, this semester's final Theatre Guild offering, which opened last evening in the Student Union Ballroom, it might have been set in a living room, or kitchen. "But," explains director Benjamin Ware, "the bedroom is the place people go to break down barriers. It is where relationships are built."

It is also the place where relationships are placed under the greatest strain, as we are shown in Ayckbourn's Tony-nominated comedy.

"On a fundamental level," says Ware, "the play is about three bedrooms and four couples." Occupying the bedrooms in Craig Doescher's "suggestive" set are Delia and Ernest (Nicole Higgins and Benjamin Courtney) the long-lived elderly couple, Jan and Nick (Liana Reda and Chad Marshall) the middle-agers, and newlyweds Kate and Malcolm (Laurie Beland and Patrick Browne). All are awash in seas of contentment, as the play opens — until the Nightmare Couple blows in.

Played by UMass undergraduates Janna Kovolcin and Raphie Aronwitz, Susannah and Trevor are co-founders of the Little Marriage That Shouldn't Have Been: selfish, uncommunicative, bristling with scorn and contempt. The failings of their marriage seem to high-light the insecurities of everyone around them.

When their malice breaks up a housewarming, it inspires our three previously happy couples to retreat to the bedrooms, and re-evaluate their own marriages. The results are both funny and disastrous.

"It's all about the building of relationships," says Ware, "and you can identify with the problems and insecurities."

The eight student cast-members have brought their own feeling and experience into the play through extensive use of improvisation in the rehearsals, and the creative team (which includes set designer Craig Doescher and costume designer Rachel Reinheimer) have worked closely under the leadership of production manager Christianna Pearce. The result is what Ware describes as "collaborative" and "natural."

"It was my job to make everything as normal as possible," says Ware. "The cast is very funny . . . and the humor is already there. But it's very realistic. You're going to recognize the relationships up there."

"Bedroom Farce" will be performed through March 30 at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are available at TIX, or at the door.

Anger motivates Tool, Mind Bomb

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

"Anger makes dull men witty, but it keeps them poor." — Queen Elizabeth I

Rage has become a powerful motivator in today's music. For some, it's the only way to write songs. The surfacing of grunge and industrial as reputable forms of music has built upon the premise which metal and hardcore introduced — rage being as much of a principle characteristic as love and happiness.

Would Trent Reznor be the musical idol he is if he insistently crooned about his sweetie and how his heart gets all aflutter every time he looks into her baby blues?

The combustible engine of modern music features yelling, screaming, vocal therapy for the listener and the performer. While Husker Du's Bob Mould may have perfected this strategy in the form as we know it today, his extensive list of successors is doing a decent job of filling the void with decibels.

So come on. . . let it out.

There. . . now don't you fell better. If not, maybe a couple of these new releases can help.

Undertow
Tool Zoo

If Tool had their way, Lachrymology would regain its sizeable cult of followers. The popular scientific study cum philosophy cum religion of the mid 20th century ceases to exist in widespread worship but lives on in the hearts of Tool. Ronald P. Vincent's theory of feeding off of pain laid out in A Joyful Guide to Lachrymology is the guideline for Tool's clenched teeth approach to songwriting.

Undertow may prove cathartic to some. Tool deviates between metal power chords and slower monotonous licks. Vocalist Maynard James Keenan then coats the backdrop with a voice of canned heat. The formula works for most of the album, but the Tool of choice transforms from a hammer into a pair of needle nose pliers, poking away rather than hitting with a full brunt.

The band's first full-length release peaks on "Swamp Song" and "Undertow." Unfortunately the "dancing on quicksand" Tool sings of becomes true for themselves. The members of Tool find themselves slipping into a cesspool of driving and sluggish Sabbath-esque progressions but with little of the melody.

Keenan's Morrisey-on-steroids demeanor is best suited for a musical accompaniment which plays off his lead, which happens on Undertow only part of the time. Undertow just doesn't yield enough material for a full album. C

P.S. On the CD version, hold on for the 69th track at least once, it's not really worth the wait, but it is part of the album.

Scenes From The Second Storey
The God Machine
Fiction

The God Machine could be accused of trying to chop down a giant spruce with a smoked mackerel. Sure, it's a valiant attempt, but in the end, all that's produced is a big stink. Scenes From The Second Storey might not be such a bad idea if it didn't purport to be of such magnitude.

Granted, the tunes are expansive and booming. Most intriguing is the band's insistent abandonment of standard song structure. The music is impulsive and yes, quite angry. Unfortunately, instead of creating the intended thunder of shock/confusion, all that The God Machine induces is a sedating wave of highly metallic sleet.

The grunts and wails of Robin Proper-Sheppard are no small feat, but the music, while being unique, is not justified. "Seven" is a 16 minute, 38 second foray into excess. Just getting through the admirable venture unfortunately requires two cups of coffee.

Scenes is most successful when it keeps the songs short, which by The God Machine's standards is five minutes. But even then, most of the songs are meditative experiments with no focus. C

Mind Bomb
Mind Bomb
Mercury

I don't like metal. Mind Bomb are metal. Therefore, the rest doesn't follow because I found myself kind of liking this. Mind Bomb is a neat collection of not-so-conventional metal tunes. The band's first effort combines slick production, sometimes with an enjoyably funky backbeat, other times with a more traditional tone.

The apparent first single, "Do You Want Some?" refreshingly combines a synth in organ mode and female backups with the customary power chords and yells. The vocal style and many of the chords are rather derivative, but nonetheless are thankfully disrupted by the less ordinary progressions and touches of whimsey. Mind Bomb don't deviate too far from the usual metal scheme, just far enough to differentiate themselves from the pack. B-

Each Finger
Insane Jane
SKY Records

And now the continuing story of Yellow; one crazy chick with a heck of a voice who would be better off with a different band. Each Finger picks up where 1991's A Green Little Pill left off; with Yellow screaming her lungs out like few other rock divas can — with composure, strength and (for lack of a better term) balls. On the new album, we also see a more mellow Yellow.

While P'ill featured one of the more scathing of rock commentaries as it stomped on Sinead O'Connor's whiney demeanor in "Empress of Pop," Each Finger is quite an improvement over the rough-edged yet promising 1991 debut. Yellow's voice shows a surprising increase in maturity. Whereas she vocally retched on Pill, she explores the virtue of restraint on Finger. "Hate" and "Sister Sue" lay testimony to what Yellow can do by exercising control. Her vocal and stylistic range is vast.

"Anymore" is strong evidence that Yellow can do better than this hard-rock format she's a part of. The song is an upbeat and funky tune on eliminating regret. When Yellow sinks her teeth into this style, she fully excels. Each Finger is a great step up for the band, an even greater one for Yellow. Insane Jane's newfound, angry, yet more harmonious approach is well appreciated.

Halloween's beasts, goblins arrive early

By SHAWN MCDONNELL
Collegian Staff

Director Sabrina Hamilton describes her upcoming production of Seventy Scenes of Halloween, which opened last evening, as "comic relief and gothic horror." Odd as this sounds, it isn't far from the mark. The play, by dramatist Jeffrey Jones, is a generous collection of dark humor, broad drama, and unlikely social comment masked behind a grinning Jack-O-Lantern.

"Halloween," explains Hamilton, "is the night where the things you are most afraid of come out."

This is precisely what happens to Jeff and Joan, the quintessential yuppie-couple whose quiet night at home is disturbed by the arrival of scheming beasts, shrieking witches, and ghosts who haven't eaten anything all day. Jones' play is divided into 70 short scenes, which are called off by a stagehand ("Scene seven — go!") and can be played in random order.

For the current Theatre Department production (which runs through May 8 in the Curtain Theatre), Hamilton has left the scenes as playwright Jones theoretically placed them, believing that there is a clear design behind his intentional disorder — what she calls an "emotional logic."

Like many of the other plays presented this semester, Halloween is about contemporary relationships. The befuddled couple who sit quietly behind the TV are plagued by ghosts of previous relationships, and the intimidating beast of society's conditioning, but as the evening progresses, Jeff and Joan become increasingly active and aware.

"This is a call for waking up and being conscious," says Hamilton.

Breathing meaning into an absurd, non-linear script has required the full cooperation of Hamilton, her cast and production team, who collected an "image bank" of ideas, emotions, or stories that might apply to the blank-slate yupples which Jones has given them.

"There was a lot of brainstorming," says Hamilton. "A lot of working off one another."

The beauty of the messages in "Halloween" is that they are sensed or implied rather than presented, and the play allows the audience to draw its own meanings. Not that they will need emotional weight to appreciate this show. Jones' script is what Hamilton refers to as "funny," though a more apt description might be "hysterical" or "side-splitting."

Jeff and Joan are straight-edged straight-guys, adroitly overlooking or misunderstanding ghosts, goblins, frights, snakes in the hall closet or corpses by the couch in a breakneck comic tour-de-force. What's more, the cast includes at least two outstanding comedy actresses in Lynda Newton (the unflappable center of "Noises Off" and "Reckless") and Michelle C. Hendrick (also of "Reckless" and the sad-funny "Mothers and Others").

The Curtain production has been theatrically staged within the very recognizable context of UMass alumnus John McDermott's set, where a large television set broadcasts "Plan Nine From Outer Space," and trees scrape ominously at the window. Touches of Halloween sound effects and the "Psycho" soundtrack (courtesy of sound designer Lori Dawson) play off images of what Hamilton terms "contemporary pop America."

This is an aspect which Jones and costume designer Rose Brown are quick to exploit: the hellions and gargoyles which plague J and J are dressed in tie-on masks and plastic ponchos.

"Seventy Scenes of Halloween" will be presented April 28-May 1 and May 4-8 at 8 p.m. in the Curtain Theatre, with a matinee performance on May 1 at 2 p.m. Tickets are available from the Fine Arts Center box office, 545-2511.

Benny & Joon: too cute for its own good

We're almost there, folks. Just a couple of more weeks until we leave this dull spring movie season and move onto summer. With Indecent Proposal still riding high at the box office (a lot of masochists out there, perhaps?), mediocrity seems to rule the day. There's a diamond in the rough in this week's releases, if only by default.

Benny & Joon — Screenwriter Barry Berman and director Jerimiah Chechick lay on the sugary charm in this relentlessly whimsical romance-comedy, the kind of movie where all the characters wear their hopelessly cute hearts on their sleeves. This is for those who thought Pretty Woman was too hard-hitting.

Benny (Aidan Quinn) is overprotective of his schizophrenic sister, Joon (Mary Stuart Masterson) and is wary of her involvement with a goofy simpleton named Sam (Johnny Depp), a pseudo-mime who likes to recreate classic routines by Buster Keaton and Charlie Chaplin. Benny likes Ruthie (Julianne Moore), but he's too concerned with Joon to notice.

Benny & Joon is played out in broad, cutesy moments. Your enjoyment of the film depends on your willingness to go along with it on its own terms or start retching uncontrollably. I did the latter, but even after squirming through 100 minutes of processed whimsy, I found myself rooting for them anyway.

The big problem in the film centers around Joon's schizophrenia and the movie's annoying efforts to peddle off her mental illness as just another of the character's cute eccentricities. Reportedly, the producers edited out any references to schizophrenia, so Joon's illness becomes an artsy fashion statement, something to go along with her bohemian abstract artwork she creates.

Masterson and Quinn manage to poke through the sticky, in-your-face charm every so often and actually act, giving the movie some semblance of a true heart beneath its artificial glaze. As for Depp, he's still stuck in his Edward Scissorhands/tortured soul routine, except he doesn't have Tim Burton and his sly vision propping him up. However, he is still miles better than his dimwit contemporary Keanu Reeves. In fact, it's Reeves who should be doing dopey stuff like this instead of Depp.

In the end, Benny & Joon rang too false for me — I like my romances to shape up a little less like Very Special Episodes of "Full House." If you like your love stories sickly sweet and impossibly upbeat, Benny & Joon is right up your alley. C+

The Dark Half — George A. Romero takes Stephen King's novel and makes it a terribly boring thriller that rehashes old King plots and slasher movie cliches. Romero (who did the Night of the Living Dead remake) isn't very successful in transferring King's scares to screen and at over two hours, takes a heck of a long time proving it.

Timothy Hutton of all people plays a writer who also pens graphic, violent novels under a pen name, George Stark. When a blackmailer threatens to expose him, Hutton decides to come clean and stop writing the Stark novels. Soon, though, the supposedly fictional Stark (Hutton again) turns up and starts offing people to get Hutton to revive his character.

With allusions to a similar predicament Stephen King was in, The Dark Half turns out to be a thrill-less hybrid of Misery and Hitchcock's The Birds. The film is well made, with smooth visuals courtesy of Oscar-nominated cinematographer Tony Pierce-Roberts (Howards End), but the performances are all second-rate. Put The Dark Half up on the ever-growing list of stillborn King flicks. D+

Indian Summer — What a concept: Big Chill meets Meatballs. What a bad movie. Good actors (Elizabeth Perkins, Bill Paxton, Diane Lane, Vincent Spano, et al) get stuck in mindlessly stale material about seven thirtysomethings who return to their childhood summer haven, Camp Tamakwa, and learn about Life, Love and Each Other.

Evil Dead and Darkman fans might want to check out director Sam Raimi in a small role as an uncoordinated handyman. If it looks like a stupid sitcom and is written like one, it probably is. Rainy day renter. D

Lacrosse challenge unfolds tomorrow

JOSH REYNOLDS / COLLEGIAN
The men's lacrosse team faces Syracuse University tomorrow at 1 p.m. on the Hill, which is down near the Curry Hicks Cage.

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Is this the year the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team beats Syracuse?

To find out, get yourself over to Garber Field tomorrow at 1 p.m., when the third-ranked Orangemen visit the Hill for the first time since 1985 to take on the seventh-ranked Gorillas, 9-2 and winners of eight straight games.

The Gorillas haven't defeated the Orangemen since 1981, when the Jim Weller-led Gorillas prevailed on the Hill, 12-8. UMass was ranked fourth in 1981; their current number seven ranking is the highest the team has climbed since then.

"When my dad (the legendary Dick Garber) was coaching he had a saying for big games, and that was 'go out there and let the fur fly.' We're not going to choreograph anything special for Syracuse," said UMass coach Ted Garber.

Syracuse vs. UMass is always a big game. But this year, the fact that both teams are ranked in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association top 10 could go a long way toward securing

Academic structure could face changes

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

A proposal by Provost Glen Gordon to restructure the University's academic framework received a boost when the Faculty Senate voted yesterday to pass the plan.

The Faculty Senate debated and passed six motions, most of which involved measures to combine and consolidate a number of the main academic units on campus.

The plan will go to the Board of Trustees in early June for approval.

The first motion aims to reorganize the College of Arts of Sciences by changing the names of the three "faculties" of Humanities and Fine Arts, Natural Sciences and Mathematics and Social and Behavioral Sciences to "Colleges," to be separately administered by Deans.

Gordon said the three units of the College of Arts and Sciences have grown apart, and the College's organization should reflect that.

"The lack of coordination [among the three faculties] is a reflection of the amount the three units have moved apart," Gordon said. "The time has come to bring a little reality around the way CAS is run."

The second part of the proposal would transfer the Center for Counseling and Academic Development and the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration to the Provost's Office.

He said these programs serve the whole University, and would receive better resources under the Provost's office.

The third motion endorsed dividing the College of Food and Natural Resources into a Faculty of Food and Natural Resources and a Faculty of Human Resources.

The fourth motion endorsed eliminating the School of Physical Education, with the department of Exercise Sciences being transferred to the School of Public Health, the department of Sport Studies transferred to the College of Food and Natural Resources and the department of Professional Preparation to the School of Education.

Gordon noted that UMass is one of the few schools in the country with a school of Physical Education. The School of Physical Education has existed largely because of its ties to the Athletic Department, Gordon said.

The one-credit physical education courses offered by the School of Physical Education will be administered through the School of Professional Preparation if the proposal passes.

The fifth motion endorsed revamping the School of Education to have a departmental structure, with departments of Teacher Education and Curriculum Studies; Education, Policy, Research and Administration; and Student Development.

"We want this to be the School of Education you want at a flagship university," Gordon said. "This will be a way to focus attention on where resources will be best used."

The final motion endorsed expanding the duties of the vice chancellor for Research and Graduate Studies to include responsibilities for economic development and creating the positions of associate vice chancellor for Economic Development as well as a Graduate Dean.

Gordon said UMass President Michael Hooker's focus on economic development as part of the University's mission will force this campus to "pay more attention to economic development than it has in the past."

Student group holds service for ANC leader

By BRIAN GORMLEY

Members of the Student Azanian Movement held a memorial service last night for Chris Hani and Oliver Tambo, the two leaders of the African National Congress that were assassinated earlier this month.

School of Management Professor Mzamo Mangaliso, who helped organize the event, said memorial services in South Africa are much more spontaneous than American services, which run according to a set agenda.

"In Africa, the service would last all night," Mangaliso said. "We would sing until the sun rises at daybreak, and we would speak when we feel like speaking. The pressure of time would be off. It is a very exhilarating healing process for the family of the deceased."

The service began with a song called "Senzenina," which was sung in the languages of Zulu and Xhosa. Student Azanian Movement Executive Committee member Anil Kanjee told those present the song says three things.

"The first part of the song asks what have we done to deserve this hardship," Kanjee said. "The second part says our only sin is that we are Black, and the third part says that the struggle will go on."

Student Azanian Movement President Gabi and Kanjee gave eulogies to Hani and Tambo, respectively. Gabi said Hani, who at the age of 32 was the youngest man ever to become a national executive committee member of the ANC, knew he was in danger in South Africa.

"In his final interview with the press a few weeks before his untimely death, Hani made these comments," Gabi said. "'I am convinced that in the security forces, there exists an element that has singled me out as

Uncle Sam can pay for school
Clinton plan offers tuition aid for national service

By RON FOURNIER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Students who perform community service could work off $13,000 in college tuition, get a modest stipend and qualify for health care and day care benefits under President Clinton's national service program.

According to a White House outline of the program obtained by The Associated Press, the plan to be unveiled Friday also includes a more controversial component to make higher education affordable: a $25 billion federal government takeover of the college loan program.

COURTESY WHITE HOUSE
Bill Clinton recently outlined his plan to let students pay for college through national service.

Clinton said during the campaign he would like to have the IRS collect loan money from students, but Deputy Education Secretary Madeline Kunin said Thursday that the Department of Education will hire private contractors to collect debts for now.

Neither the community service program nor the loan overhaul would be fully in place before 1997, but Clinton promised last month that the program eventually will "change America forever and for the better."

Clinton sketched the broad outlines of this program March 1; he scheduled a speech Friday to students at the University of New Orleans to promote it now that draft legislation is ready to send to Congress.

Some 150,000 students would join the National Service Corps by 1997, when the program is fully phased in. Students could work full-time for up to two years, earning $6,500 a year in tuition credits. Payments would be made directly to schools.

The $13,000 is substantially less than the average cost of tuition but equals the average debt among graduating students.

Students, age 16 or older, could serve after high school and before, during or after they attend a college, university or vocational school.

The White House outline also says participants "without access to health insurance will receive health coverage." Federal money would pay up to 85 percent of these costs.

Participants also could get "child care assistance, if needed," the document says.

The total cost of the health care and day care benefits was not specified in the outline.

The federal government would pay a portion of the students' stipends. The outline says the government would pay no more than 85 percent of the annual stipend now given to Volunteers in Service To America, or VISTA, workers. In Washington, that would amount to less than $600 a month, although the figure would vary from city to city.

Community service programs would be allowed to double that amount using their own money.

To administer the National Service Trust Program, Clinton wants to merge two existing federal agencies, the Commission on National and Community Service and ACTION, which runs VISTA and other domestic volunteer programs.

The new entity would be called the Corporation for National Service. The corporation would have an 11-member board of directors appointed by Clinton and confirmed by the Senate.

Mrs. King sues BU for papers

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — A lawyer for Martin Luther King Jr. says a Boston University archivist promised right after King's assassination to return the civil rights leader's papers to the South once a suitable home was established for them.

Testimony from Harry Wachtel, who represented King and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, was introduced Thursday in a Suffolk Superior Court trial over the ownership of the King collection at BU.

King's widow, Coretta Scott King, has sued BU over the papers. She wants them returned to Atlanta, where King lived, to be placed in the Martin Luther King Center for Nonviolent Social Change, the home of the other King papers.

BU has countered that it owns the papers under the terms of a 1964 letter King signed making the papers the "absolute property" of the university upon his death.

But Wachtel, in a sworn statement taken in 1989, said Howard Gotlieb, BU's director of special collections, promised to return the papers during a phone call Wachtel placed to him a day or two after King was fatally shot on April 4, 1968.

Gotlieb denied on the witness stand at the current trial that he had ever made such a pledge.

There was also a question whether Gotlieb, who is not an officer of the university, would have had the right to transfer control of the papers.

Wachtel was not required to testify in person because of his age and health.

Wachtel, who said King told him personally he wanted the papers returned to the South, met with Gotlieb in November 1967.

At that time, Wachtel said, Gotlieb was very reluctant to consider giving up the collection, calling it "the jewel in the crown" of BU's special collections.

Gotlieb, Wachtel said, also argued that it would be too expensive for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference to develop the type of archive needed to preserve the King papers.

"He didn't have to argue too hard because we didn't have a facility at that time," Wachtel said.

But Wachtel said when he called Gotlieb after the assassination, he was willing to return the papers once a proper home for them had been prepared in the South.

There was no evidence, however, that either Wachtel or Gotlieb had followed up the conversation with anything in writing.

Earlier this week, Mrs. King testified she did not know until a 1985 meeting with Boston University President John Silber that BU was claiming ownership of the papers.

BU attorneys presented evidence showing she was aware no later than 1966 of the letter King had signed giving the university ownership on his death and that a 1981 letter from Silber, asking that she send the remaining King papers to BU, also indicated the university felt it owned them.

Silber suggested in that letter the original King papers be kept at BU and copies be kept at the King center.

The case went to trial after attempts to settle it out of court failed.

The trial is expected to last at least another week.

MIT to extend benefits to gay workers' families

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — The Massachusetts Institute of Technology announced Thursday that it would offer medical and dental benefits to the partners of its homosexual employees.

The benefits will be the same as those already provided to the wives, husbands and dependents of MIT's faculty and staff. But unmarried heterosexual partners will remain ineligible for coverage.

"Because most opposite-sex couples have the option to marry, the issue of access is less compelling," said MIT Vice President Constantine B. Simonides.

Simonides said the policy toward homosexuals was changed "to address a recognized inequity in access to benefits by gay and lesbian employees."

It was not known how many MIT employees might be eligible for the extended benefits. A special enrollment period was scheduled for next month. The coverage will take effect June 1.

Simonides said the cost of the program was expected to be "very minimal."

MIT's decision to grant the benefits to same-sex partners follows similar moves by the city of Cambridge, Boston Children's Hospital, the University of Chicago and Stanford University.

Harvard University also is considering providing benefits for same-sex partners. Provost Jerry Green said Thursday that a recommendation is expected to be made by June.

Boston Globe columnist visits UMass

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

Coming up with topics to write on is not a problem for Boston Globe columnist Alan Lupo. If anything, the problem is choosing a topic that will lend itself to a short attention span, Lupo said during a visit to the University yesterday.

"Given that we live on a fairly large planet, there's no lack of subjects," Lupo said, his ruddy, cherubic cheeks bursting into an infectious grin.

But being a columnist is no cakewalk for Lupo, whose two weekly editorial/opinion columns and one city column are known for their frequent satire, sharp wit, and ideas, ideas, ideas. . .

You have to get off your butt, go down the street and talk to people," said Lupo. "I do a lot of reading, talking, checking out sources."

"It's a fair amount of reporting, but not as much as investigative reporting," Lupo said.

He said of himself and other columnists, "Some people think we know a lot [about issues]. But I don't know half of what the people know that are covering them."

Lupo said he sometimes pokes fun at himself, as in his column appearing this Saturday, and also writes about personal things others may identify with.

He earned a bachelor's degree in English/journalism from UMass in 1959 and attended Columbia University. He has worked at the Baltimore Evening Sun, where he covered such historic events as John F. Kennedy's funeral and Lyndon Johnson's presidential race, Boston Magazine and the Boston Phoenix, besides dabbling in television and public relations.

His wife, Caryl Rivers, is a journalist, novelist and Boston University professor, with whom he co-authored a book. He also has two children — Steve, 26, who earned degrees from UMass and Northeastern and now resides in Texas, and Alyssa, 23, who earned a degree from New York University's school of performing arts and is currently acting in "Twelfth Night" with Shakespeare and Co.

Street crime, organized crime, politics, social issues and humorous and light pieces are some themes Lupo said he uses in columns.

When Lupo talks to people in his course of work, he tries to establish a connection with them.

"I give people my home phone number. I want them to know I'm part of the community," Lupo said, noting that the huge Globe office, with its big flags flying, looks like a fortress to many.

"In journalism you are the conduit between the public and the private sector," he said. "You have to understand

Writer says the KGB will not die

Documentary portrays the power of the secret police

By KELLY SPANG
Collegian Staff

Yevgenia Albats, a Russian writer, spoke Wednesday at Amherst College about the function of the Soviet secret police and intelligence agency, the KGB, in present-day society, which she believes is no different than its role during Communist rule.

To illustrate and support her opinion, Albats presented a 30-minute documentary film prior to her talk.

"Our purpose for making the documentary was to present evidence — live witnesses who prove that nothing has happened to the KGB," Albats said.

The film portrays a wide variety of people, ranging from clergy to the former chairman of the KGB, testifying to recent violations of privacy ranging from tapping phones to trailing an individual.

People in the film spoke of the fear of always being watched. A woman who advises President Yeltsin on ethnic problems explained the KGB was like something breathing down one's neck. "It is something we live with all our lives," she said.

In her presentation, Albats asked many probing questions of her government and Russian society. She inquired as to whether the KGB functions under some guidance or if it acts on its own initiative. Further, she appealed for a democratic society in Russia that would not have any need for the KGB.

An important feature of the film was its time setting: after August 1991. Albats wanted to show Russians and the world that although there are changes in the political structure of Russia, the KGB is still very prominent.

"There is a great assumption around the world that the KGB is closed down," she explained. "The politicians still rely on KGB."

Albats believes that the KGB is an independent political force which gives its own orders.

"The point is, the KGB is a strong, well-equipped political force," she said. "It can create many difficulties for Russia."

Albats went on to question who runs the KGB. She does not believe the head of the KGB has much control over its activities. Instead, the colonels have most of the power.

"You never knows what orders are given or fulfilled," said Albats.

The goal was to broadcast the film on Russian central television in August 1992 to commemorate the 1991 power take-over by Gorbachev. However, the piece was never allowed to reach the people. Albats was prohibited from airing the film.

The documentary did air in Germany and German-speaking countries, according to Albats.

Before the making of this film, Albats received the Soviet Unions' highest honor in journalism, the "Golden Pen," in 1989.

Authors accuse FBI of unjust operations

As the second half of the "Crimes by the FBI" lecture series, two writers accused the Federal Bureau of Investigation of violating the civil liberties of those they investigated.

Dr. Sigmund Diamond, author of "Compromised Campus" and Ross Gelbspan, Pulitzer Prize winner and author of "Break-ins, Death Threats, and the FBI" spoke to approximately 25 people last night in the Commonwealth Room, where Earthfoods is located.

"The FBI denied participation in various activities such as taking of files from databases, surveillance, harassment, and propaganda during the Reagan administration, yet wouldn't investigate the possible sources," Gelbspan said.

He said other government agencies

Expert examines Israel

Speaker debunks gender equality myth

By LISA GREENFIELD
Collegian Staff

Dr. Alice Shalvi discussed the current status of women in Israel Wednesday night. She attacked what she said were misconceptions and ignorance about the status of Israeli women, both outside and within Israel.

She said it was a common misconception that Israeli women had acheived a level of equality comparable to that of other nations.

The first of the reasons she gave for the misconception was the generalization that women have equality on the Kibbutz, the self-sufficient communities in Israel.

This myth was dispelled with Shalvi's example of the Yom Kippur War, which she said took the men away from the Kibbutz for a year. "Women had been relegated to service activities: kitchen, laundry, and child care," said Shalvi, and the Kibbutz was unable to bring in the harvest.

Shalvi said this experience lead women to realize they were not as equal as they had previously thought.

The second example of the equality myth that Shalvi gave was the Compulsory National Service Act, which required both men and women to do military service.

Once again, this myth of gender equality was dispelled by what Shalvi called the "centrality of military consideration." She explained this as the marginality of women's importance to the military. Women are easily excused from service because the need for women in the military is less than the number available.

Shalvi also said no women have ever served in the front line, or in direct combat.

If a woman marries, she is immediately discharged, because there is a prejudice. "Once she is married, she belongs at home," Shalvi said.

"The inequality of military service has a profound influence on self image," Shalvi noted. She said that the ideal of a man is "to be macho" while a woman sees her prime role as "support."

"Good men go to be pilots and good women go to the pilots," is what Shalvi says is the perception of the roles of men and women in Israel.

someone not to be trusted. The police see me as the brain and the key strategist. I have given up trying to prove that I am campaigning for peace. I fear that there are people who have the capacity to eliminate me. I am frightened about what they are planning.'"

Kanjee said Tambo, who was president of the ANC from 1967 to 1991, was a soft-spoken person who's leadership helped organize and strengthen the ANC.

"Tombal committed his life not only to South Africa and Africa, but to the liberation movement all over the world," Kanjee said. "He led the ANC from an organization of different exiles into one of Africa's strongest organizations. If we were to follow half of his example, it would only benefit our people."

Kanjee said Tombal worked to fight racism all over the world, not just in South Africa.

"Tombal created one of the most powerful liberation movements in Africa out of basically nothing," he said. "He was not just committed to fighting the White minority regime, he was committed to the anti-imperialist struggle all over the world."

how people think, feel and talk."

Lupo cited some motivations for entering the field of journalism.

"One of the reasons you go into journalism is to raise hell," Lupo said. "Another is to comfort the afflicted."

"You must be able to put things in words that people will read and hear and see and understand," he said.

Lupo, on a final note, shared his own definition of news, saying, "News is an issue awaiting the arrival of a reporter."

quence perpetuated by the military inequality. A career in the military is influential as "not only an entry into civilian life, [it is] the main way to enter into Israeli political life," she said. "There is not the same option for women."

The last contributing factor to the equality myth, Shalvi said, was Golda Meir. Shalvi described Meir as one of the first women Prime ministers and, "a strong woman in a time of great need."

Nevertheless, Shalvi discredited her as a support to womens' equality, because, "a woman as the head of state does not mean all women have equality."

Shalvi said that Israeli women did not feel that they needed liberation due to the fact that they felt they were liberated because they had fair maternity leave as well as excellent federally subsidized child care.

The event that had opened their eyes to their lack of equality was the Yom Kippur War, said Shalvi.

"With so many men away, the economy began to grind to a standstill."

She explained this standstill in terms of the exclusion of women as bus drivers, engineers and harvesters, thus closing down public transportation. Factories were unable to repair broken machinery, and the Kibbutzim crops could not be harvested.

Speaking on political improvements, Shalvi said that Prime Minister Yitzak Rabin was influenced to establish a commission to,"investigate the status of women."

The commission lasted two years rather than the one year that was expected. By this time, there was a new Prime Minister, Menachem Begin, that Shalvi said was not enthusiastic about the commission's research. As a result, Shalvi said that only 40 out of the 241 recommendations made were actually taken.

"The myth was a myth and too little has been done in the time elapsed," Shalvi said.

She explained that Israel is a Jewish state and the other major religion is that of the Muslims. Shalvi drew a comparision between these two groups' sense of a woman's role.

She said that a woman is expected to be a homemaker, wife and mother and "has no role in public life."

The reasoning she gave for this predjudice, is that Orthodox is the only "officially recognized" form of Judaism and their power is carried over to politics.

Shalvi explained that even non-orthodox members of the government, "have internalized the principles of the woman's sphere and have given weight to Orthodox opinions."

Shalvi claimed that the consequences of the 1991 Gulf War were another awakening for Israeli women.

She explained how the women had prepared the sealed rooms in which the Israelis had to stay. She emphasized that since the Israeli men were not called for duty, they had to spend extensive and unusual amounts of time with the women and children.

"There was unprecedented domestic violence in the months following . . . 40 women murdered," Shalvi said, which deviates markedly from the annual average of deaths from domestic disputes, four or five.

In her opinion, "the violence stemmed from the male frustration to not do what they are used to in a time of need."

The lenient sentences for these domestic murders, Shalvi said, caused women to come out and call for change. She said that their fight was successful in getting many of the sentences increased.

Shalvi said that The Israel Woman's Network, the non-partisan coalition to defend and improve the status of women in Israel, which Shalvi founded, gives her great optimism for the future.

"Not only have we seen real progress, God willing and women willing, we will see even more progress within the next year," Shalvi said.

Shalvi mentioned that issues on the agenda include the establishment of more battered women's shelters, a separation of religion and government, and the establishment of rights for women in divorce.

Nevertheless, Shalvi stressed the importance women can have in the struggle for peace. She emphatically reaffirmed something she had said in the book "Deborah, Golda and Me" by Letty Cottin Pogrebin.

"I really believe that women have something to teach men about achieving consensus, about giving a little in order to win a lot . . ."

With college soon to be behind you, it's time to trade in your greasy snacks for something with dual overhead cams and sequential multi-point fuel injection. Of course, we're talking about the fun-to-drive Nissan NX 1600, one of a full line of very special Nissan cars we're offering to graduating college students at some very special leasing and financing rates. The program is called the Nissan College Graduate Financing Program and you'll find complete details (in other words, eligibility requirements and legal jargon) in a brochure that we have conveniently placed in your cap and gown package.

It will explain how getting into a styling, new car like the NX 1600, 240SX, or Sentra is easier than you might have thought. (Not as easy as ordering a pepperoni pizza. But easier than Biophysics 401.) Also, look for details about our sweepstakes, which could put you behind the wheel of an NX 1600—free of charge—for an entire year.

NISSAN
It's time to expect more from a car.

Now that you're graduating from college, perhaps it's time to redirect your pizza budget.

The naked boy runs amok

Yesterday, I went to school in the nude. I knew it would be sunny and warm, so I figured it would be as good a day as any.

I decided to go to school without any clothes on because I am a senior. I graduated mentally about two weeks ago and now I'm just trying to hang on until the end. Classes do not excite me anymore, and my professors all look like huge potatoes to me now. I knew that if I didn't take some drastic action, I would skip yet another day and ultimately fail my final year at UMass.

Jeff
McKENZIE

Yawning loudly as I scratched my exposed bottom, I headed for the bus stop.

The chill of the spring air was giving me goose bumps on my back as I strode down Old Sunderland Road. The temperature, being somewhat colder than my naked flesh was used to, was causing a bodily syndrome known in some cultures as "turtling," something I had not counted on. The fine hairs of my bum, though, were doing a decent job of insulation. As I walked, I had to sidestep several broken bottles on the sidewalk.

I arrived at the bus stop, where a few people stood waiting for the bus. It seemed as though the bus was late.

"Do you have the time?" asked a young woman, tapping her foot on the ground.

"I'm not wearing a watch," I replied.

"Great," she muttered, turning back to look at the corner that the bus would come around. Hmmm. Maybe she didn't notice that I was stark naked, I thought.

The bus was crowded from the many people who were trying to get to class at the last possible minute, but very quiet.

"Excuse me!" I heard as a sharp finger poked my ribs, "Excuse me!"

I craned my neck around to see a white-haired woman, still poking me.

"You're standing on my foot, young man," she scolded. "Can you please move."

She began to kick me with her other foot and kept poking my ribs.

"Get out! Get, get, get –" she yelled. The bus was pulling to a stop, so I jumped out the opening door, falling into a crowd of waiting bus riders.

"Hey, take it easy there, buddy," somebody said before the crowd trampled me boarding the bus.

This isn't as funny as I thought it would be. Nobody even notices I'm not wearing anything. This is rotten.

I walked over to the Bluewall for a cookie, hoping that one of those people-watchers in there would notice and at least be offended. I stood at the counter waiting for my peanut-butter chocolate chunk, scratching myself to add to the effect.

"Are you a student?" the guy asked, handing me the cookie.

"I'm naked," I returned.

"Student?" he inquired again.

"I'm not wearing any clothes," I persisted.

"Hey, you're holding up the line," someone called from behind me.

"Yeah, I'm a student," I finally said.

"Sixty cents," he resounded, "And hey-"

"What," I muttered.

"Nobody likes a wise guy."

Disheartened, I returned home, knowing that the mental graduation was complete. I was in the real world now, and nobody cared if I was naked or not. The party was over.

I sat down in my room and began to write my resume.

Varsity perks at students' expense

About the so-called weight rooms in Boyden:

First of all, there should be bigger and better facilities that everyone can use. Weight room two is pathetic.

And now they're going to close weight room one to everyone except varsity athletes! This is absurd. My high school weight room was better equipped than weight room two is. Furthermore, you didn't have to worry about half broken dumbbells falling on your head or rickety, shaky benches that feel like they're going to collapse from underneath you!

Hey, who cares if we don't have good facilities or enough room to lift? I mean, we're not varsity athletes, right?!

There are over 20,000 people at the University. Not everyone lifts, but enough do that they should be compensated for on campus. There may be over 600 varsity athletes at this school, but they are a minority.

There are a lot more of us students who lift because we love it, not because we have to. Students get something out of it more than just a check in the attendance book from some coach.

Clinton's 100 days in limbo

America held hostage: day 100.

Thank you very much, comrade Rush Limbaugh for the only accurate assessment of William Jefferson Clinton's first 100 days at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. Let me explain: in case you didn't read the news, or even if you did, Clinton is the President of the United States.

You may not know this because Clinton is doing his best Invisible Man impression. I was willing to give him a chance, but his list of non-accomplishments runs wide and deep. Clinton's administration so far is not unlike the Grand Canyon: large, a sight to behold, and barren.

Michael
MORRISSEY

The man has done virtually nothing in his first hundred days and Americans are finally getting antsy. Clinton's approval rating is at an all-time low 53 percent. Here are some of his embarrassing policies:

Nannygate. Clinton makes it known that he wants a woman in as attorney general. Of the first two choices, Zoe Baird and Kimba Wood, one is a lawbreaker and the other a liar, hiring illegal aliens as nannies. That Clinton would even want an attorney general like these people offends me.

Not only do these "career women" not have the time to raise their own children, but they hire illegal aliens, those who broke into our country illegally and have no understanding of American culture. In other words, they are perfect people to raise the next generation of liberals.

Good choice, Bill. His third choice, Janet Reno, is under intense scrutiny for her mishandling of the Waco incident. Like a weak president, Clinton has vaguely said that he is responsible for the massive loss of life, all the while allowing Reno to twist in the wind.

Gays in the military. Clinton has yet to force through this edict to allow homosexuals and lesbians to publicly serve in the military. Controversial or not, Clinton does not even have the support of the country's leading commander, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Colin Powell.

Say what you want about this controversial issue, but a leader who does not even have his country's military behind him isn't too secure in his job.

Women flying planes. Hip hip hooray, President Clinton has just solved one of the most pressing issues of the 20th century. After years and years of heated debate, protest and many needless deaths over this issue, yes boys and girls, women can now fly combat missions in jet airplanes.

While important for the issue of civil rights, this "accomplishment" is the sort of useless garbage that passes for news. In other words, it is exactly like Clinton's successful placation of the tree-huggers at the environmental summit out west.

Clinton's economic package. With fewer Republicans in the United States Senate this year than in decades, it seemed a sure thing that Clinton would at least get some bills passed. Wrong!

Forty-three true Americans stood up valiantly for the rights of their constituents and told Clinton to take his pork-barrelling bill and shove it. When the Democrats attempted to stop the filibuster by a vote, the 43 Republicans held firm, and Clinton's first package went down the drain like raw sewage.

The man's hard-headedness and inability to compromise by removing some of the pork barrel parts led to his downfall. It also shows that Clinton is a poor excuse for a president, and things can only get worse.

"I promise to faithfully execute. . . the laws of the United States. . ." Clinton hasn't executed jack so far, a violation of the oath he took 100 days ago. Do you think we could impeach him?

Dorm closing, last final conflict

Why is it that Housing Services insists on ignoring the needs of students? It seems that once again, Housing Services has decided to close all dorms at the same time that the final day of the semester begins. What does this mean? It means that, for the third semester in a row, I must have all of my possessions out of my dorm room before I have finished my exams. And this means I must take time away from my studying to pack up, unlike most of my peers, who will have plenty of time to pack up their possessions after their exams finish. Why is this? Because I chose a class that has a final during the last period.

I understand why Housing Services want students out of the dorms as soon as possible. It's because it saves the University money, of course, because the dorms won't be inhabited. This also saves Housing officials the hassle of dealing with all of the parties that would be going on after the finals are done. Yes, it is true that there certainly are parties going on after students finish their finals. However, these parties are generally more towards the middle of the finals period, not at the end. By the end of the finals period, students are so dead tired they are in no mood to party. All of the other parties will have ceased, because all of the other students will have left for home.

Basically, the dorms closing at the same time the last final starts is completely ridiculous. Housing should keep the dorms open one additional night, or at least until 6 p.m. so individuals like myself, who have finals in that last period, are given a little time to relax and pack, instead of having to pack and study for finals at the same time.

The story behind Spring Concert

Did you like the Beastie Boys or Fishbone at last year's Spring Concert? Do you like any of the bands on the list for Spring Concert this year? Whether you like any of the bands or not it is important for the student body to know what University Productions and Concerts does to bring you the best concert it can.

First, UPC wants to get an understanding of what bands you want. UPC does this by questionnaires and group response from general committee meetings that are welcome to anyone. UPC wants your input.

After getting a general opinion of what bands you want, UPC tries to get them. With money UPC is allocated from sources like the Student Activities Trust Fund, UPC puts bids into agencies representing these bands. Hopefully the agency and bands will be receptive, but UPC is constrained by the amount of funds it has and the bands touring at the time. Not every band you want is touring or is in UPC's price range, like R.E.M. or Pearl Jam.

UPC then must coordinate the concert with Amherst and UMass police, UMass lawyers, Physical Plant and the Environmental Health and Safety Board. Also, aspects of the concert must be checked by the associate vice chancellor of student affairs, and the business manager for student activities.

UPC itself must have enough people to work hospitality, security, promotions and stage crew. UPC needs people to put on the best concert it can.

Everyone at UPC is also a student, with finals just around the corner. All this work is to bring you a fine Spring Concert. If you have questions or want to help come to the UPC office at 406 Student Union.

were also involved, including the Central Intelligence Agency, the Internal Revenue Service, and the National Security Council, but the FBI was primarily responsible for the secrecy of the whole process.

The emphasis of the pair's discussion was the restriction of information by these intelligence agencies and the political persuasion and pack of lies they say has evolved.

There was a concentration on the investigating done of various groups and individuals thought by the FBI to be heavily opposed to the Reagan/Bush administration and its policies towards Central America.

"In 1981, there was FBI counterterrorism, as there were many Salvadorans coming to the United States, and the borders had to be watched for guerrillas," Gelbspan said. "There were many terrorism investigations and transporting of data bases form Salvadoran intelligence in order to put a good face on what the government was doing. It's difficult to say to what extent the FBI has blood on their hands concerning this."

He described how the FBI responded to an advertisement in the New York Times by a group supporting a cap on weapons during the nuclear freeze movement, saying the FBI wanted the group and anyone who responded to the ad put on terrorist files.

He also said the IRS audited this group and others "extensively and ridiculously," and that one El Salvadoran woman was tortured and had her child abducted and eventually murdered.

While Gelbspan elaborated on the Bureau's targeting of groups and its links to El Salvador and other Latin American countries, Diamond spoke of the difficulty in interpreting its "Freedom of Information Act," describing how difficult it is to get files on oneself and how unduly long the process is.

"People think that all you have to do is ask for it and they send it to you. Nothing could be further from the truth," Diamond said. "They classify everything, and what they say has been de-classified they still send to you blacked out, and you have to take their word for it."

They said the media and the public need to act on the injustices done by these agencies, particularly the FBI.

"The FBI won't permit policies for social change to get off the ground, and they have no right," Gelbspan said. "The public's indifference to these violations will cause problems like those in the 1980s."

"There is no reason to suspect that these black box jobs aren't still going on, because they are," Diamond said.

GORILLAS FACE OFF WITH ORANGEMEN ON THE HILL

a home-field playoff game or a first-round bye for the winner.

Additionally, with sixth-ranked Hofstra losing to fourth-ranked Johns Hopkins 11-5 Wednesday, a win for UMass could conceivably propel the Gorillas into the top five.

The third-ranked Orangemen started their season much as UMass did, dropping two of their first three games before embarking on a long winning streak. Both beat common opponent Rutgers, as UMass won 10-7 and Syracuse rolled, 21-7.

As always, Syracuse is deep, talented and athletic. Witness last season's 25-12 SU win at the Carrier Dome, in which the Orange ran off a number of transition goals, breaking an otherwise close game wide open.

"I watched the videotape of that game," Garber said. "We had four penalties to their 10. We beat them in ground balls. We beat them in face offs. We had the same number of shots.

"But they put 48 of 49 shots on cage. We had 28 of 49 on cage," he said. "That and the fact that they hurt us in unsettled situations cost us that game."

Coaches and players alike have pointed to tomorrow's game, along with Wednesday's New England title game against Brown, as their game of the year. Both would like to see a huge throng of fans on the Hill tomorrow afternoon.

"We had 12,143 fans for the 10-9 [Syracuse] game at the Stadium in '89," said Millon, referring to the epic contest that many consider among the greatest games UMass has ever played. "Saturday we'd like to see a huge crowd."

Syracuse, for their part, are used to being everyone's "game of the year." Despite that, the Orange have more than enough weapons to put any team away quickly. Matt Riter,

CHRISTOPHER EVANS / COLLEGIAN

University of Massachusetts All-American attacker Mark Millon, who leads the nation in goals and points per game, is looking to lead the Gorillas to their first victory over Syracuse since 1981. The game starts at 1 p.m.

Jamie Archer, Charlie Lockwood, Matt Bettinger, Charlie Lockwood and Dom Fin are all legitimate scoring threats. Riter leads the team in scoring with 32 goals on 73 shots — an impressive ratio — while Archer has fed a team-high 29 assists to teammates.

For the Gorillas to stay with the potent Orange, they must get hot goaltending and solid defense, especially at the start. Syracuse has outscored opponents 44-23 in the first quarter and holds a downright scary 54-12 advantage in the second quarter.

"If we start out slow against Syracuse, we'll be down 9-0 instead of 2-0 or 4-0," said Mark Millon, UMass' leading scorer.

Goaltending will be another big concern for both teams. In a big game — and this is the biggest game of the week in college lacrosse, save Johns Hopkins vs. Towson St. — a hot goalie can carry a defense. UMass' Tom LoPresti and SU's Chris Surran are both capable of a great day in net.

Surran, who is approaching 400 saves for his career, has a 67 percent save average. LoPresti compares well to Surran, however, with a 59 percent save average. Furthermore, LoPresti only allows 6.4 goals per game, while Surran allows 8.9 through the net per outing.

Another area in which UMass must convert is its extra man attack. Syracuse has been penalized 69 times for 53 minutes, far more than UMass' 51 penalties. Both teams kill penalties extremely well — 23 percent for UMass, 20 percent for SU — but the Gorillas must capitalize on man-up opportunities to win.

Are the Gorillas optimistic? Indeed they are.

"We can beat these guys," Millon said.

Sox falter after hot start, Bonds tearing up league

It's kind of funny how pennant fever suddenly disappears when the Red Sox lose six in a row. After jumping out to first place in the American League East and one of the best records in baseball, our beloved Red Sox have dropped to fourth place and a very mediocre record of 12-9.

BEHIND HOME PLATE

by Jeff Hojlo

The question is, is this team for real? Was the fast start a fluke or can Mr. "fourth-and-one" himself, Butch Hobson, motivate his troops to play at a high level for the full season? Come to think of it: ex-Sox manager Joe Morgan had that ridiculous 6-2-and-even saying and the Sox were successful — Butch has this fourth-and-one thing and . . . we could very well be on to something.

But the Sox, led by big Mo Vaughn, have looked good so far both at the plate and on the rubber. Vaughn is hitting an even .400 with 16 runs batted in, four home runs, .677 slugging percentage and only nine strikeouts. The low strikeout total is a vast improvement from last season and much of the thanks should go to new hitting coach Mike Easler, who has molded Mo into a patient, confident hitter who can hit to all fields. The real Mo has definitely arrived.

Mo is also fast becoming a favorite among Sox fans, especially after last week's storybook episode when Mo promised a nine-year old little boy with cancer that he would hit a home run for him that night against the California Angels. A nice gesture to begin with but an even better one after Mo came through on his promise by stroking a 400-plus foot shot over the center field fence. Luck? Maybe, but still, you have to love this guy.

A few other Red Sox players deserve mention in this space. Mike Greenwell has made a miraculous comeback after elbow surgery last year. With a .305 average and 18 RBI, he's (you heard it here first) well on his way to winning the comeback player of the year award. Catcher Tony Pena has been maligned of late because of his woeful .180 average but he is still an indispensable defensive catcher and leader on the field. Roger Clemens (3-1, 1.64 earned run average) and Frank Viola (4-1, 1.47 ERA — best start since 1990) have also been impressive.

Around the rest of the league, pitcher Tim Wakefield of the Pittsburgh Pirates gets the bionic player of the week award. Wakefield, a knuckleball pitcher, threw a whopping 171 pitches in a 6-2 victory over the Atlanta Braves. To put that into perspective, most pitchers are taken out of the game after about 100 pitches. Wakefield has also walked at least nine batters in three of his last five starts — and still won.

Do you think Barry Bonds is happy in San Francisco? Wearing his father Bobby's old number 25, Bonds is playing like a man possessed as he leads the National League in hitting with a .397 average. Bonds is also first in RBIs with 20, first in slugging percentage (.825), first in on-base percentage (.524), first in runs (21) and third in home runs with five. Wow.

One of the most interesting players in the major leagues is Philadelphia's John Kruk, who plays like Pete Rose did but looks like Perry Mason. As a fan, you wonder how a guy with a gut that big who looks like he has salsa and Twinkies three meals a day can be successful in the big leagues. But somehow, day in and day out, he does the job — this season to a tune of .348, 5 home runs, 14 RBIs — all among the league leaders. While most players in this day and age are concerned with proper diet, exercise, etc., Kruk probably goes back to the locker room during the seventh inning stretch and pops a few cold ones. Gotta love this guy.

Digable Planets are Reachin' to Northampton

Upstart rap group challenges listeners

By CALEB COCHRAN
Collegian Staff

Do you like rap music? If you had a chance to check out one of the grooviest and most original rap groups in the country today, would you go? Well, you'll have your chance on Sunday when the hip-hop trio Digable Planets comes to Pearl Street in Northampton.

With the release of their hit single "The Rebirth of Slick (Cool Like Dat)," the Planets have found stardom in the commercial rap world. "Cool Like Dat," however, is just a small taste of the refreshing and innovative sounds you can expect to hear Sunday night.

The group's debut album, Reachin' (A New Refutation of Time and Space) is jam-packed with upbeat songs marked by relaxing rhymes and thoughtful lyrics. While "Cool Like Dat" is the only tune to hit the airwaves so far, tracks such as "Where I'm From," "Swoon Units" and "Examination of What" are just as original and enjoyable as the debut single.

"Jimmi Diggin Cats" is an interesting retrospective tune, and "La Femme Fatal" gives a male viewpoint of a friend's potential abortion situation.

All three members of the Planets (frontman Butterfly, Ladybug and Doodlebug), were exposed to wide varieties of music while growing up, and this definitely comes through in the group's music. Jazz is the most obvious influence, as Butterfly is quick to point out.

"I grew up on traditional early jazz, Blue Note and Prestige artists," he says. "I like music that takes you places you might not usually go."

Ladybug cites Brazilian jazz and samba as two major influences.

"My parents are from Brazil," she explains. "That music really broadened my outlook."

Much of the group's appeal stems from the happy and uplifting feel that their music provides. You won't hear any violent, angry tracks about how terrible life is from these guys. What you will hear are relaxing, thought-provoking tunes that challenge the listener to think about rap in a new and original way.

If you dig rap, you'll definitely dig the sounds of Digable Planets. Check 'em out.

Digable Planets will play at Pearl Street Sunday night at 9. Tickets are $11 in advance and $13 at the door. Call 584-7771 for ticket info. The show is 18+.

David Lynch is a director who is Wild at Heart

By MARTIN BROWN
Collegian Staff

Director David Lynch is a really weird guy. For those who are into this sort of thing (count me in), his movies are a fascinating look at absurd and freak behavior. Sometimes this gets the best of him, such as the confusing Dune, but overall, I think Lynch is one of America's most talented directors.

Video Pick of the Week

For instance, in Wild at Heart, Lynch takes two caricatures (the super tough, super cool felon and the southern belle) and totally puts them through a cross-country nightmare. It is more than simply an outlaw road movie, Wild at Heart is an indulgence into the grotesque that is meant to disturb you.

Sailor Ripley, the lead character played cooly by Nick Cage, is a throwback to Elvis Presley (or as stated in the movie, simply "E"). Cage does a wonderful job impersonating "The King" with such lines as, "This here jacket is a symbol of my individuality and belief in personal freedom" or "Are you giving me a chance to prove my love to my darling?" Hey, what more can you ask from a movie?

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Laura Dern of "Wild at Heart."

Laura Dern plays Lula Pace Fortune, Cage's girlfriend, who is along for the ride. She plays the southern belle with a nice flare that adds a touch of innocence to a quite strange movie. However, some of the lines Dern has to act do make you wonder if Lynch has any idea of how to handle female characters. If you look at Lula's character, there certainly is a case that he doesn't. In the scheme of the movie though, a few odd lines may not be such a bad thing.

The movie begins with one of the most violent scenes ever. When Sailor and Lula are leaving a dance, a killer hired by Lula's mother (for various reasons) attacks them with a switch-blade. Sailor not only stops it, but brutally kills him by pounding his head into the pavement. I tell you this as a warning not to rent the movie if you dislike gory scenes. This movie has plenty of them.

The movie also contains many graphic sexual scenes. I think it is handled quite adeptly and maturely, but again, if you don't like this kind of stuff, rent Pretty Woman.

Wild at Heart also has an excellent supporting cast. Willem Dafoe plays Bobby Peru, an ex-Marine that has turned criminal with a haunting abnormal disposition.

Isabella Rossellini, of French runway fame, does her second work with Lynch (Blue Velvet was her first), playing the femme-fatale Perdita Durango with quiet precision that does make you wonder why she isn't in more movies.

Experience three chances to catch yeP!ness

By MIKE CARVALHO
Collegian Staff

The dictionary definition of "yep" is "a positive response," and that's just the kind of reaction local concertgoers are having to this up-and-coming band.

If you haven't seen yeP! yet, this weekend is your chance to catch one of the hottest bands in the area as they play three different spots around the valley over the next two days.

yeP! has entered two battle-of-the-band contests — and won them both. The first, held in Southwest last semester, landed them a gig during Southwest Week yesterday. Winning the battle in Northeast this month led to a spot on the lineup at the Northeast Area Pig Out this Saturday afternoon (for Northeast residents only).

The band yeP! started as an idea in the fall of 1991 when Shawn Gundersen (guitar/vocals) put up some posters that attracted the attention of Jack Carson (guitar/you-name-it). Jack brought in keyboardist John Greene, and bassist Raul Goodness joined soon after. Drummer Fred Hazelton replaced a part-time drummer in September 1992, and the group has been playing together ever since.

Trying to define the music that yeP! plays is a difficult task. Their influences show the diversity of their musical tastes — from David Gilmour to Jimi Hendrix, Tangerine Dream to the Grateful Dead, and even Animal (from the Muppet show) — this is not a group with a single musical focus.

This variety adds an interesting dimension to yeP!'s repertoire — in one set they might play some reggae, some blues, a little jazz and even throw in something hardcore.

And while many local bands play a lot of covers, yeP! concentrates on their own songs. "We play some covers," said keyboardist Greene, "but we like to focus on originals."

The result is something the band calls "yeP!ness," a high-energy brand of music that turns all their gigs into parties. The band encourages people to bring drums or "percussion toys" to their shows so that everyone can get involved in the music.

Comparisons to Phish are somewhat accurate — both bands spend as much time practicing as possible, play an eclectic blend of music and put on amazing live shows — but the band's originality really doesn't lend itself to comparisons.

A Crack in the Jamb, yeP!'s studio tape which is now available at local record stores, gives the listener a glimpse into "yeP!ness" — including a great reggae version of the Mario Bros. theme — but the best way to listen to yeP! is live and in person.

yeP! will be playing three more shows this weekend, starting tonight when they open for the Aquarium Rescue Unit at Pearl St., starting at 9 p.m.

This Saturday, yeP! is scheduled to play at the Orchard Hill Bowl Day at noon. Northeast residents will be treated to their musical stylings at 3 p.m.

Next Saturday, May 8, at 2 p.m., yeP! will play the Spring Blast benefit for MassPIRG at 366 Allan Rd. in Belchertown.

For information on these dates or upcoming events, call the yeP!line at 549-3832.

■ Wild at Heart

Lula's mom, Mariette, is ingeniously played by Diane Ladd, in a role that is on the one hand very loving, while on the other being a cold hearted murderess. One scene in particular comes to mind, in which she goes to work on herself with lipstick. Not only is the shot mesmerizing, but extremely disturbing.

The dependable Harry Dean Stanton has a small part as Johnie Farragut, a detective that is assigned by Lula (whom he loves), to track down Sailor and Lula. He and Ladd work together very well (even though he works off anyone nicely) to create a source of sanity in Mariette's world.

Lynch draws the film into a loose paralell of The Wizard of Oz and other fairy tales. Mariette is the wicked witch that haunts them on their journey on a kind of yellow-brick road. Lynch stretches this theme to an absolutely absurd ending. Intentional or not, it turns out to be quite funny.

Lynch does some incredible camera work in the film too. Instead of having normal sex scenes, Lynch shades the shot with a pink that adds nice dimension to a cliched scene. He also uses a pounding heavy metal soundtrack to these sequences, which fans the intense chemistry between Cage and Dern.

Lynch also has the recurring motif of fire. Lulas's dad and uncle are killed in "accidents" involving fire. This is offset by close-ups of the flame in Sailor's and Lula's cigarettes. It is one interesting effect among many that is standard to Lynch's bizarre world.

Wild at Heart is definitely not for everyone. If you like movies that don't strive to be politically correct, this movie is right up your alley. It is a grotesque, strange and violent movie that takes a cliche genre — the road movie — and warps it into something new. What that it is, I'll leave up to you.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good working relationship with a supervisor will enhance your role in the scheme of things. Be open to change and experimentation. Your skills can be used in profitable new ways.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You and someone close to you reveal your plans or a change of address. Home life is more rewarding than in the recent past. Be careful — it is not yet summer and the ground may still be wet.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Family pride leads you to make a difficult decision. You will need to have the full support of your partner or mates. Do not be afraid to ask for special favors.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The emphasis today is on sharing. A relaxing family get-together shows you the meaning of true love. Romance is high on your list of priorities. Make plans for a fun dinner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Speak up if higher-ups try to heap too many responsibilities on your shoulders. Romance will bloom if you want it to. Seek another source of income to meet rising costs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An enthusiastic colleague may be all too willing to spend your money. Take extra precautions to protect your interests. State your views, but show that you are also willing to listen.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Reach out to new people and your social life will accelerate. You find a way to use your funds more profitably. For once e you and your mate are in perfect accord.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A plan or project is blossoming in an unexpected way. Take advantage of a burst of energy and finalize your plans. Make big financial decisions now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Health changes in the home scene will please your mate. Love seems to surround you wherever you go! You return to a work project with fresh enthusiasm. Profits soar.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your spirits could plunge momentarily if an associate says something critical. Try to overlook this person's petty comments. Purchases for the home are fine if you need — and can afford — them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Certain limitations are lifted. Love is yours in abundance. You will enjoy sharing the good things in life with friends and family. A romantic connection grows deeper and stronger.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A busy day lies ahead. Concentrate on your responsibilities before turning your attention to romance or recreation. A carefully planned trip will let you relax.

a 45-5 overall record and their second straight Atlantic Coast Conference championship in hand.

Runs won't come easy against the Lady Seminole pitching staff, which features three pitchers all ranked in the top 10 in the country in earned run average. Marla Looper (16-0, 0.29 ERA), Rebecca Aase (14-1, 0.52 ERA) and Toni Gutierrez (15-4, 0.39 ERA) combine for a nifty 0.39 ERA, tops in the nation for a pitching staff.

FSU boasts six All-ACC performers on their squad. Besides the three pitchers, the Lady Seminoles placed center fielder Leslie Barton, right fielder Susan Buttery, and second baseman Lisa Davidson on the all-conference team.

FSU has the ACC Rookie of the Year in left fielder Shamalene Wilson and the league's Coach of the Year, Dr. JoAnne Graf, who is in her 15th season at FSU.

Florida St. could be looking for some redemption as the Minutewomen, on their way to the Final Four, knocked FSU out of the tournament via 4-2 victory.

While the Lady Seminoles may be foreign to UMass, the Huskies are all too familiar. UConn has already beaten the Minutewomen this year in a doubleheader by scores of 4-0 and 2-0, plus the Huskies will be back here on Monday for another doubleheader with UMass head coach Elaine Sortino's squad.

Not to be outdone by the Lady Seminoles, the Huskies placed seven players on the All Big East team, led by repeat conference Player of the Year Janna Venice and Pitcher of the Year Pat Conlan. And while FSU has three pitchers in the top ten nationally in ERA, UConn has Conlan, who is No. 1, sporting a 0.20 ERA.

Head coach Karen Mullins, in her 10th year at UConn, was named Big East Coach of the Year for the second year in a row after guiding the Huskies to their fourth straight Big East title.

right field line that Salisbury dove for, but missed. The ball kept rolling and Early was rounding third when the umpire sent her back to second, claiming that Salisbury never touched the ball before it went out of play.

UMass' Kuchinskas sent one out of play as well in the top of the sixth inning. It came in the form of a deep fly ball deposited over the right field fence. The home run, her sixth of the year, provided Claffey with all the run support she would need.

"I felt good about coming through when we needed it," Kuchinskas said. "I did struggle a little so it was a big hit."

Daut pitched the entire seven innings. She gave up only three hits (two of them to Early), and struck out six, raising her record to 10-6.

touched everyone. He was as captivating as ever.

At the ESPY award show on March 4 Valvano took the stage for one last stirring time. Jimmy V was the definition of inspiring that night as he spoke. He said that cancer could take his body, but it could not take his mind, heart and soul. Jimmy V was and will always be a profile of courage.

Daut, Claffey lead softball past Hartford

UMass ekes out 2

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

HARTFORD, Conn. — Who needs hitting, anyway?

The University of Massachusetts softball team certainly did not need it yesterday. UMass, buoyed by the strong pitching performances of senior Darlene Claffey and sophomore Kelly Daut, took both ends of a doubleheader from the University of Hartford by the scores of 2-0 and 1-0.

"Kelly and Darlene I felt both pitched outstanding games," said UMass head coach Elaine Sortino. "They pitched out of some tough spots when we needed them to."

There weren't that many tough spots in the game for either team however, as neither offense could get on track until the later innings. The Lady Hawks (8-22) refused to just roll over and let the Minutewoman wrecking ball go right through them.

The sweep gets UMass to the 20-win plateau, as they are now 20-15 for the season, 9-1 in the Atlantic 10.

In Game one, both Daut and Hartford starter Kathleen Baughn threw Cheerios at the opposition until the Minutewomen were finally able to push two runs across in the top of the seventh to secure victory.

The rally started when right fielder Jenn Salisbury doubled to the right-center gap with one out. Senior left fielder Stacey Nichols followed that up with a double down the left field line, scoring Salisbury.

The University of Massachusetts softball team, fresh off a road game against the University of Hartford, hosts the Diamond Classic this weekend at Totman Field. Saturday, the Minutewomen play South Florida and UConn, and Sunday they host Florida State.

With Nichols on second, shortstop Amy Powell beat out an errant throw to first, leaving runners at first and second with one out. After senior catcher Sherri Kuchinskas popped out, junior first baseman Rachel Lawson singled home Nichols with a line shot to center.

Daut, who got out of a second and third, no outs jam in the fifth, went the distance, scattering five hits and striking out three, raising her record to 10-8.

The nightcap was as much of a nail-biter as the first game. UMass threatened to score in the second inning with runners on first and third and one out, but a ground out and a pop-up took care of that rally.

The Lady Hawks weren't any better as they never got a runner past second base, thanks to a close call by the umpire. With two outs in the home half of the third, shortstop Kim Early lined a shot down the

Softball Classic

It may not be Abdow's Hall of Fame, but it is still a Classic.

Starting tomorrow morning at 10 a.m., the University of Massachusetts softball team will host the third annual Diamond Classic, a tournament whose field will include the Minutewomen, Florida State University, the University of South Florida and the University of Connecticut.

The Minutewomen will have their hands full with two marquee teams like FSU and UConn. Heading into the tourney, the Lady Seminoles are ranked sixth in the nation while the Huskies are at No. 23, second in the Northeast region.

Saturday's schedule sees FSU up against UConn in the first game, followed by a UMass — South Florida contest. The Minutewomen don't get a break as they have to come right back in the next game against their longtime rival UConn. The day is capped off with a Sunshine State showdown between South Florida and the Lady Seminoles.

There are only two games on tap for Sunday. The action gets underway at noon when SFU takes on the Huskies, followed by the weekend-capping Florida St. — UMass game.

The Lady Seminoles, ranked first in the South region, come into the game with Red-hot baseball hosts Maine, heads to URI

Second baseman Mark Pileski and the Minutemen host Maine today at 3 p.m. before heading to Rhode Island for a crucial A-10 matchup this weekend.

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Can it get any better than this? The University of Massachusetts baseball team sure hopes so.

With a 9-1 drubbing of Siena Wednesday, the Minutemen (14-16) are riding a five-game winning streak going into today's home game against the University of Maine (3 p.m.).

"We want to continue to play well," said head coach Mike Stone. "This game has no bearing on our league standings, but we want to keep going."

Junior right-hander Greg Dowd, who pitched five innings of relief Sunday for his first victory, will start today for the Minutemen, who look at this non-conference game as important.

"Maine's a big New England rival, and we're playing well," said right fielder Justin Howard. "It will be a good tune-up before URI."

League games are what matter at this point, though, and UMass' biggest series of the year is this weekend's A-10 showdown with the University of Rhode Island. The Minutemen are currently tied for fifth place in the A-10 with a 6-8 mark. To go to the A-10 tourney, they need to finish in the top four. In other words, they need to keep winning.

Rhode Island (9-20, 3-10) is the doormat of the league this season. Only two pitchers have more than one win for the Rams, junior Derek Leahy (3-4) and freshman Steve Cote (2-5). Leahy has three complete games and leads the team with 30 strikeouts, while Cote has started six games in his first collegiate season.

"They always play us tough," said Stone, scoffing at the standings. "We have to be ready to play. We can't assume that they're going to lay down for us because they're not. We'll have to come ready."

The Rams are batting a collective .238, with only two players hitting over .300. Outfielders Hiram Barber (.356) and Jim Sauro (.323) provide a good proportion of the offense.

The Minutemen, on the other hand, are hitting over .300 as a team. Howard is leading the team in hitting, batting .403. He also leads the team in home runs (tied with Bill Knight and Jeff January with 4) and doubles (10).

Other hot hitters include second baseman Joe Mattivello (.366 in 11 starts) and third baseman Steve Corradi, who has a .363 average while leading the team with 33 runs and 26 walks.

The UMass pitching is the key ingredient, and it seems to finally be coming around. On Tuesday, Peter Ferrari came back from tendonitis and threw five innings, allowing one hit. On Wednesday, freshman David Dart pitched six and one-third innings and picked up his third win of the year.

"The pitching sure has come around," Howard said. "We had two great performances during the week and over the past weekend. We can't think we'll walk on the field, throw our gloves out there and win, so we've got to treat URI like they're in first place."

Jay Murphy (3-0) has jumped in as the number one starter, and Jeff Toothaker (4-5) has been the consistent senior of the staff. Both will start Saturday, and Jim Telgheder will pitch Sunday. Things may finally be gelling.

"We feel a lot better now, everybody's more relaxed and we aren't pressing," said Howard. "Baseball's a lot more fun when you're winning."

Valvano's life affected many, in and out of sport

"Don't give up. Don't ever give up."

After I heard Jim Valvano had died Wednesday morning from cancer, I was shocked even though I knew it was coming eventually. I knew that Jimmy V had been battling cancer since 1992 and that his body would quit on him sometime. Still, for some reason his death came as a surprise to me because of the way Valvano lived his life and fought his disease.

I'll always remember watching the 1983 NCAA Championship between the Houston Cougars and the North Carolina State Wolfpack. Going into the game I was a fan of the high flyin' boys of Phi Slamma Jamma, but eventually the emotion and passion of Valvano and his team of overachievers grew on me.

When Lorenzo Charles dunked Derrick Whitenburg's heave to give NC State the miraculous win, the camera switched to Jimmy V and his frantic search for someone to hug. You could just see the happiness and jubilation in Valvano as he ran around the court. It was an unforgettable scene.

That championship game marked a beginning for me, I was then hooked on college basketball and still am today. I began to follow Jimmy V and his Wolfpack teams through my high school years. The book "Personal Fouls" was released and I read it my senior year.

While the book, among other things, forced Valvano out at NC State, it did not stop me from being his fan. Valvano's character was one thing that the book did not make me question.

Jeff
CROFTS

Watching Valvano switch over to television was a thing to behold. He knew basketball, of course, but on top of that he was funny and entertaining. Through his commentating, Valvano made it crystal clear he loved the game of basketball and he loved the kids playing it.

Then came the announcement last year that Valvano had spinal cancer. Sadly, it was through his battle with cancer in which most of us truly got to know what a great person Valvano was. He was always positive, always joking, even though he knew he had probably less than one year to live.

My friend Dan told me about how he had met Valvano during the UMass-Cincinnati basketball game at the Springfield Civic Center in December. Dan said he saw Valvano at the press buffet table and when he approached Valvano, Jimmy V joked about 'how any team with a coach with the last name Calipari couldn't have pasta at the buffet is crazy.' That was Valvano, he made other people laugh, he made other people smile even though he was fighting a terminal disease. Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins said, "Nobody could make you laugh like Jimmy V."

As this college hoop season wore on, less and less was seen of Valvano, he was battling hard against his horrible disease. He was determined to beat cancer, just like he had beaten Houston a decade ago.

Valvano's colleagues rallied around him, showing to the world their love, respect and admiration for the V. Fans around the nation showered Valvano with their thoughts and prayers. Everyone loved Jimmy V.

When Valvano did make a few public appearances they were special, very special. At a Duke-NC State game, Valvano and his fabled Wolfpack team from 1983 were honored for their achievement. After Valvano made a speech, there was not a dry eye in the house, he had

Koresh's body found with bullet to head

By JEAN PAGEL
Associated Press

WACO, Texas — Cult leader David Koresh died from a gunshot to the head before a fire destroyed the cult's compound, authorities said Sunday.

His skull had been broken into pieces, said David Pareya, a county justice of the peace.

Authorities would not say if Koresh, 33, had been killed or if he committed suicide. The bullet wound was in the center of his forehead, authorities said.

His body was found alone, near the kitchen and communications area of the structure, Pareya said.

His body was pulled from the compound on April 22, but it took several days to piece his broken skull together, Pareya said.

"The condition of the body was about the condition of the rest of the bodies that were there; extensive burning," he said.

His body was identified through X-rays and dental molds, Pareya said.

Fire destoyed the Branch Davidian compound on April 19, after a 51-day siege with federal agents. The fire began several hours after authorities used tanks to batter compound walls and dispense tear gas.

Investigators said cult members lit the fire, although some of the nine survivors said agents started it when a tank knocked over a lantern.

Koresh's body was the sixth to be publicly identified by investigators. All showed evidence of being shot.

He was among those wounded in the February 28 gun battle that started the standoff when federal agents raided the compound because of alleged firearms violations. The battle left four agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and an unknown number of Branch Davidians dead.

Koresh had said 95 people were inside, making the death toll 86. Investigators have pulled only 72 bodies from the rubble. Officials said it's possible some bodies were incinerated and will never be recovered.

The bodies of 17 children have been recovered, said James Collier, a McLennan County justice of the peace. Koresh had said 17 children were in the compound, and that he fathered many of them.

President Clinton has ordered an inquiry into the February raid as well as the FBI's attempt to end the standoff.

Koresh, also known as Vernon Howell, often identified himself as the Lamb of God and many of his followers considered him Jesus Christ.

Clinton supports tax increases

Proposed bill to rollback Reagan's '86 Tax Reform Act

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Thwarted in his efforts to pass a relatively insignificant spending bill, President Clinton now faces a major-league test of his clout: persuading Congress to approve the biggest tax increase in history.

This time, the Senate rules are in his favor. Republicans cannot block a vote on his top-priority $265 billion, five-year tax plan as they did on his mainly symbolic measure to spend $16 billion for emergency job creation.

On the other hand, Clinton's two most important allies on taxes — the chairman of the House Ways and Means and Senate Finance committees — are committed to preserving a major legacy of the Reagan administration: the 1986 Tax Reform Act. Clinton wants to roll back several of its provisions.

The Ways and Means Committee, chaired by Rep. Dan Rostankowski, D-Ill., and controlled 24-14 by Democrats, begins writing its version of Clinton's bill Tuesday. Those who watch the panel say major elements of the president's tax increase are likely to survive, with little or no GOP support, and pass the Democratic-controlled House as well.

That would toss the hot potato to the Finance Committee, chaired by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., where Democrats control by an 11-9 margin. Republicans are preparing several amendments, and a defection by only one Democrat could force major changes in Clinton's bill.

The bill's explosive potential was evident when Moynihan remarked at a committee session last week that enactment could hand control of the Senate back to Republicans.

Nevertheless, if the measure clears finance, it is likely to become law.

The tax increase would provide most of the deficit reduction that Congress agreed to in concept when it approved the outlines of Clinton's budget April 1. The same "reconciliation" bill will include numerous spending cuts and restraints.

It also carries more than $85 billion worth of targeted tax breaks to stimulate selected activities, and spending increases that Clinton calls investment in the future.

Rostenkowski and Moynihan are decidedly unexcited about one of those tax breaks: a $28 billion tax credit to help businesses buy equipment and machinery. A broader version of this investment tax credit was one of dozen special provisions wiped out by the 1986 tax overhaul in exchange for lower rates for individuals and corporations. The two chairmen were proud supporters of the overhaul.

"We are not going to start moving the tax code back in the direction we tried to change," Moynihan says.

Birds chirping make campus a concert hall

By JOHN WINCHELL

The sun's rays began to peek over the horizon, hinting the beginning of a beautiful late spring day. As I walked along the beaten path, I sensed that something missing, but I couldn't place what it was. Then I suddenly realized: the environment around me was silent; completely devoid of the all too familiar sounds of human activity. As the bright globe slowly rose, the landscape was bathed in its reassuring light.

Then, in the quiet, I heard a single bird song in the distance. Then another, a third and soon I was in the midst of a chorus of nature's finest musical performers. With me on this early morning walk was Dr. Donald Kroodsma, professor of orthinology at the University of Massachusetts and an avid bird listener. Now, you may wonder why I didn't call him a birdwatcher. The answer is quite simple: Kroodsma identifies different bird species by their

Activist discusses Nazi persecution of gays

By ERICA MOSS
Collegian Staff

Warren Blumenfeld, author of Looking at Lesbian and Gay Life and editor of Homophobia: How We Are All Hurt, came to speak in the Campus Center Thursday.

Blumenfeld, a Jewish poet and gay activist spoke on Nazi persecution of gays during the Holocaust.

He focused his discussion on the "systematic extermination" of Jews and gays in the Holocaust. Blumenfeld made a comparison between the extermination of Jews and gays.

He quoted from John Boswell who said, "the fate of Jews and gay people has been almost identical throughout European history. The same laws which oppressed Jews oppressed gay people; the same groups bent on eliminating Jews tried to wipe out homosexuality; and even the same methods of propaganda were used against Jews and gay people, picturing them as animals bent on the destruction of children of the majority".

Both Jews and gays alike were accused of "working in the league with the devil," Blumenfeld said. These two groups were also viewed as "racially inferior beings." Gay men were believed to be the cause of famines, earthquakes and pestilence, he said.

In Germany, during the twentieth century, homophobia was persistent. Homosexuality in particular was viewed as an "intermediate stage between the sexes referred to as middlesex and as a soul of one sex combined in another," Blumenfeld said.

It was also thought that homosexuality was also a "result of Jewish blood which corrupted men." Germany was afraid that the gays, Jews and other minority groups were going to "corrupt the nation and its moral fiber" and therefore lead the country into desolation said the activist.

"It was these views which lead up to the massive genocide of millions of people. Primarily Jews and gays were targeted as the scapegoats for all of Germany's political, economic and social problems," Blumenfeld said.

The Nazis used "contragenics," said Blumenfeld to describe the tactics by which the Nazis ruthlessly eliminated gays and Jews. This method is the manner in which the Nazis maintained the purity of the race, he said.

Jews, gays, handicapped and the elderly were all rounded up and taken to concentration camps, said Blumenfeld. In the concentration camps Jews and Homosexuals were treated in the most brutal manner — "they were at the mercy of the Nazis."

Blumenfeld quoted from an anonymous gay Holocaust survivor to describe how gays were treated in the camps. He recounted this survivor's story. Gay men were continuously tortured and often taken outside in freezing weather having several bowls of water thrown at their naked bodies. Gay men were also commonly used by "doctors" for medical experiments and often castrated in the process. Hormone experiments were done usually resulting in death. These experiments had little if any scientific value to them, Blumenfeld said. He also mentioned how men were routinely killed by hydrogen or oxygen injections, whippings, hangings, testicle scoldings, broom

UMASS TO HOST EDUCATION CONFERENCE

The School of Education at the University of Massachusetts will be hosting a day-long education conference on the issue of school choice on Friday, May 7.

The conference, titled "School Choice in Massachusetts: Intention and Impact," will feature morning presentations by State Senate President William Bulger, D-Boston, state Sen. Arthur Chase, R-Worcester, a member of the Senate Ways and Means Committee and Roseanne Bacon, an executive board member of the National Educational Association.

The conference's afternoon session will feature Education Commissioner Robert Antonucci, Carl Petersen, president-elect of the Massachusetts Association of School Committees, state Sen. Stanley Rosenberg, D-Amherst, and state Rep. Ellen Story, D-Amherst, a member of the legislature's Education Committee.

Among those scheduled to give welcoming remarks are University President Michael Hooker, state Secretary of Education Piedad Robertson, Chancellor Richard O'Brien and Dean Bailey Jackson of the School of Education.

PROFESSOR TO PARTICIPATE IN NATIONAL WORKSHOP

A University of Massachusetts professor is the only representative from an academic institution asked to help review legislation drafted by U.S. Sen. John Kerry, D-Massachusetts, on coastal erosion management.

Rutherford Platt, professor of geography and planning law, will attend a special workshop sponsored by the Federal Insurance Administration on May 4 in Orlando, Fla., to help review draft amendments to the National Flood Insurance Program.

Last year, Kerry introduced similar amendments that sought to establish minimum national setbacks for new and rebuilt construction along eroding shorelines, all of which died in the Senate.

Most of the provisions were based on recommendations of the National Research Council Committee on Coastal Erosion Zone Management, which Platt had served on.

UNIVERSITY ANNOUNCES LILLY TEACHING FELLOWS

The University of Massachusetts has announced the Lilly Teaching Fellows for the coming academic year.

The Lilly Program helps establish the teaching careers of junior faculty by giving them time to design or revise a course and to build their teaching skills under the supervision of the University's Center for Teaching.

The new Lilly Fellows for 1993-94 are: Mary Anne Bright, nursing; Henry Geddes, communication; James Kurose, computer science; Patricia Lasch, art; Mzamo Mangaliso, management; Lisa Pike, sport studies; Randall Pike, biology; and Linda Shea, hotel, restaurant, and travel administration.

In addition to the Lilly Program, to underscore the importance of undergraduate teaching, the University presents annual Distinguished Teaching Awards and Faculty Grants for Teaching. For the first time this year, a new set of teaching awards in each school of the Univerisity will be given.

UMASS TO HOST "COLOR IN THE CAGE"

The University of Massachusetts Minuteman Marching Band Color Guard will host the seventh annual "Color in the Cage" indoor color guard show May 7 at 7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage.

Casino Night profits slightly

Increased participation did little to boost revenues

By DANIEL BOUCHER
Collegian Staff

Even though the number of people attending the Board of Governors' Casino night this year increased sharply over last year's attendance, the amount of revenues taken in rose only slightly.

Still, the event made a profit of a little over $4,200, which will be handed over to the National Brain Tumor Society.

Records provided by Dan Gordon, the chief organizer of the event, show that Casino night raised $8,879 from ticket sales, gambling and the non-alcoholic bar. Participants also donated an additional $90. Last year, the event raised $8,677.

Casino night attracted about 550 people this year, as opposed to last year, when Gordon said 350 people attended the event.

Expenses for Casino night were about $4,748. Last year, the event cost between $3,000 and $3,100.

Gordon said the organizers donated about $800 more this year to the UMASS music department for the jazz band, and spent about $240 more this year for tuxedos. The non-alcoholic bar cost $170, said Gordon, but made $495.

Gordon also said the board spent more for advertising and food, because there were more people.

Gordon added he was careful to save the receipts of purchases to make sure the board was not charged for anything, and said he thought that might also be a reason for the appearance of increased expenses.

Casino night revenues cover the cost for the event's production. Otherwise, the board, which gets its money from the Student Activities Trust Fund, would effectively make a donation to the Brain Tumor society.

"It would be inappropriate," for the board to donate money, said Gordon, "because it's public money."

Katja Hahn d'Errico, the coordinator of student businesses and an employee of Tix, told the board at their weekly meeting, "I liked how hard you all worked," but added "I think you could have made much more money."

Gordon said he wished the event had made more money too.

Hahn d'Errico suggested more extensive training of volunteers and closer work with Tix and the board's Student Activities advisor, Judy Gagnon.

Gordon said at the beginning of April that he hoped to raise $16,000, but acknowledged at the time the goal was optimistic.

However, George Fitzgerald, the chairperson of the Board of Governors, said one of the event's purposes was to entertain students as well.

Even Hahn d'Errico, referring to the wheel of fortune, said "I had fun, and I loved the wheel."

Also during the Board meeting, Bill Harris, the director of the Campus Center, said work was scheduled to begin next week to build a new concrete steam trench next to the Campus Center and between Hasbrouck and Goessman.

Harris said the work had to begin next week, rather than after the end of school, because the workers had a 120-day period in which it had to be finished.

Dan Lizana, appointed by SGA president Dave Nuñez to the Board, also said the bathroom off the Campus Center concourse, plus the one outside the Student Union Ballroom, had to be improved.

AIDS Quilt comes to UMass

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

The AIDS Memorial quilt represents over 23,000 people who have died from the HIV virus, according to Cleve Jones, the founder of the Names Project.

The quilt is made up of 12 by 12 panels that are divided into eight squares. Four of these panels will be brought to the University and displayed tomorrow.

Peer health educator Sharon Gavini, a senior human services major, is coordinating the event. She said she plans to have a table promoting AIDS awareness with information about HIV/AIDS and condoms.

Gavini said the reason she is coordinating the event is because she wants her peers to see the quilt and realize they are not invincible.

"I see my peers engaged in dangerous behavior," Gavini said. "With workshops, they just don't get it. I think it's important to the college community that they see it."

The quilt has panels representing people in all 50 states and 29 countries. It was recently shown at the March on Washington last weekend.

Organizers said the Names Project goals are to illustrate the enormity of the AIDS epidemic by showing the humanity behind the statistics. They also hope to provide a positive and creative means of expression for those whose lives have been touched by the epidemic and to support the raising of vital funds and encourage support for people living with HIV infection, ARC (AIDS related complex) and AIDS.

According to Jones, the quilt is the largest piece of evidence of our failure to fight the epidemic and he said he does not understand why it is not enough to have the leaders of our country do anything.

The Names Project has headquarters in every major city across the country and each group has quilting bees. The quilting bees are considered therapeutic, giving family and friends a chance to talk and occupying their minds and their hands as they put together quilt panels.

The quilt will be shown tomorrow from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The event is being sponsored by the Names Project, University Health Services and the Peer Health Education program.

distinct songs, not their appearance.

He can pick out the song of a Redwing Blackbird from a chorus of different calls all happening at once.

"We (his orthinology class) focus on identifying birds by ear. They all have very distinguishable voices," he said.

According to him, listening is the best way to identify birds. As we walked along the equestrian trails between Orchard Hill and Sylvan, Kroodsma stopped often to listen and then call to elicit a response from a certain breed. Once he recognized a bird and located its proximity to our position, it was time to break out the binoculars for the traditional watch to confirm the I.D. by its plumage.

"In the spring they're so pretty because they have their spring breeding plumages," he said.

For all you campus bird aficiónados, Kroodsma says there aren't many different species at UMass. Most are migrating birds who just stay for the spring and then continue along their migratory routes. The major migrators are the warblers. They appear in the greatest numbers in the spring every year. For the next two weeks, look for Warblers to frequent many campus roosts, including trees by the campus pond, up Chancellor's Drive, on the grounds of the Durfee Conservatory, in the marsh near the stadium and along the equestrian trails.

Only a few birds stay in the valley year round, such as Northern Mockingbirds, which we observed several of during our outing. We also saw other common spring birds including Cowbirds, Sparrows, Robins, Goldfinches and Brown Thrashers.

Kroodsma noted a noticeable absence of certain bird species usually sighted this time of the year in the valley.

"There is not much of a variety yet this year," he mused. "We're missing a few of the key birds."

There are even some birds of prey who stop for a respite in the area briefly during the spring. We were lucky enough to see an American Kestrel, the smallest species of Falcon, in our travels that morning. Sometimes, Kroodsma says, one can see an Osprey Eagle around the campus pond.

As the landscape turns the color of lush green, the sunbathers return to campus lawns for another season of worship, the sounds of evening crickets surround you, the smell of barbecue permeates the air and the crack of a bat hitting a baseball echoes in the distance, we are reminded of the season of renewal and rejuvenation at hand and that all these sights and sounds are, in one way or another, signs of spring.

handles lunged up their anus or sent to the crematoriums.

As for the treatment of lesbians, there were only six documented cases. It is really not known how many were affected, said Blumenfeld. Lesbians were perceived as a threat by not conforming to the role of the typical woman. They refused to marry and become wives and they smoked in public which was viewed as an act of nonconformity, he said.

According to Blumenfeld, Western government was aware of the slaughter going on in Europe, but by the time they were ready to do anything it was too late. Blumenfeld makes a parallel of the events which occurred during the Holocaust to current issues, like the situation between Bosnia and the Muslims. He said "at least there is still a chance to prevent such a genocidal slaughter from reoccurring."

The "Holocaust of Aids," said Blumenfeld "is the modern day Holocaust."

"The dehumanization of people did not end with the death of Hitler", said Blumenfeld, "it is still on the rise." We must "heed the call and attain the goal of never again," the activist told the audience.

Ben Zeman, a Graduate student worker with the program for GLB concerns said he was "very pleased Blumenfeld could make it, and that he took the time to come here. I am happy to work with Hillel and the Holocaust committee. I hope it is beginning of a relationship between Jews and gays."

"100 Days" — foolish standard has serious consequences

In the media circles which have appointed themselves as the judges of our government and the arbiters of the success of an administration, the mark of 100 days of presidency has been adopted as the hour of decision. A quantitative figure of no real political value or importance, 100 days — just over three months — are used to determine whether an entire four-year presidency will be a success or a failure.

Peter J.
ORVETTI

It is a period far too short for any lasting policy decisions to have been implemented, and any "quick-fix solutions" in the earliest days of an administration are bound to be simply smoke and mirror public relations, no more than an attempt by a new president to look bold and dynamic. Witness the early decisions of the Reagan presidency, which rolled back federal spending and cut back taxes. While these actions created a false economic burst in the early part of the 1980s, they also created a massive polarization of society and a veritable economic collapse that, coincidentally enough, took place shortly after Reagan's tenure of office expired in 1989.

The mark of a truly great presidency, then, is not in fast, glamorous action. Rather, it is in vision and long-term planning, in moderation and commitment. The Clinton administration can arguably be criticized as off to a slow start, but it is the strength, and not the speed, of that start that is of the most importance. Already, policy direction and precedent have been laid down for growth in the future. Issues of civil rights, economic parity, health care and world policy in the aftermath of the Cold War have been dealt with.

While not all of these have been handled in the best possible manner, each has been met with consideration and care rather than bold, rash choice. To call a presidency failed because there is no massive change in society after only three months is foolish. The economy is slowly but surely recovering. Equal rights issues, not only for women and minorities but also for gays and lesbians, are being brought to the agenda without the condescending overtones of the previous 12 years. The Clinton administration is off to a very strong start, but there is no rush to judge.

It is a major failing of our electoral system that no president, Democrat or Republican, is given a fair chance to effect change and achieve his or her goals before those same goals are obliterated by opposition politicians seeking to meet their own selfish goals. A particular example of this failing of the system is the Machiavellian self-interest of Dole, who wielded his Senate power to stop a much-needed relief program, creating a major defeat for the president and making Dole himself look good on the evening news.

Just a few weeks ago, $16 billion in spending was blocked by the Senate's Republican minority, stopping needed aid from reaching the stricken cities and dying industrial towns across the country. Bear in mind that $16 billion is only a small fraction of any of a number of wasteful Reagan/Bush defense budgets; bear in mind that, via a minor Senate rules technicality, the relief budget was defeated even though a majority of senators voted for it. Because of the rush to judge the Clinton presidency, and because of the selfish personal agendas of career politicians, needed aid to our own people is not forthcoming. Why is there no relief? Because it would stimulate the nation, and satisfy the population. In short, it would help make Bill Clinton a more successful president, one who might be re-elected.

And because of party politics, there is no money for those who need it, no aid for those who suffer for it, no security for those who helped to create it.

Sleep well tonight, Senator Dole.

Investigation falls short

It's one thing to be emotional over death from natural causes, and totally another to be emotional over murder. Upward Bound was murdered, and not by Bush! The way the chancellor and his entourage covered everything up and manipulated the media to make us believe Washington was at fault is a damn shame. It reminds me of the first Rodney King verdict. They may have fooled some people, but those close to the program know the real deal behind the coverup.

Malkes
GOMES

I must commend the University for such a laudable act of kindness in reviewing the grant proposal, but I'm still waiting for the answers to mismanaged funds, withholding of federal mail, harsh treatment of employees — all questions which have been eschewed. The chancellor promised on three occasions to investigate the issues in front of many witnesses, but has neglected his duty. If you get a chance, read the July 20 Valley Advocate, featuring the Upward Bound Program, the sordid dealings regarding funds, treatment of employees and the grant proposal. I forgot, most students were away when the article came out, just like they were when the school made the loss of the program public.

The problem I have with Elaine Anderson's review of the grant proposal is that, through the grapevine, allegedly she is associated with Amherst, UMass and the chancellor. It is very peculiar that she has not spoken to three key Upward Bound case workers to this very day. She said she didn't know how to reach them, so I offered to get their numbers. One would think if the University was really committed they would put some effort in contacting the ex-employees they treated so kindly; they sure made an effort to keep them out of the picture while they were performing sabotage. When I called with the numbers, she said her review was almost done but she would try to reach them. The funny thing is, three days later, and article in the March 12 Gazette came out blaming Washington in her report, which leads me to believe she was just pacifying me by saying she would check into it.

If the University has nothing to hide they need to investigate the original charges. But if you committed a crime are you going to hire someone to tell the world about it or would you cover up to uphold your image? Students need to know that the federal government has up to seven years in which they can come to investigate. If there is nothing to hide let them come on down. Write letters, send petitions and call the Department of Education's Upward Bound office.

When the new chancellor arrives we need to educate him or her quickly about campus politics, so that a distinguished few in Whitmore don't play the new kid on the block game. Remember that when President Hooker came, they didn't inform him about anything, another disgrace in itself. I will be back in September of 1994 to make sure the school hires competent people to write the new grant proposal and that the program is reinstated.

The power is in the hands of the students. As Malcolm X said, "Power doesn't back up in the face of a smile, or in the face of a threat, or some kind of nonviolent loving action. It is not the nature of power to back up in the face of anything but some more power."

Malkes Gomes is a Collegian columnist.

Change the system: it's up to you

If there is one thing we can learn from last year's riots in Los Angeles, it is that many Americans are fed up with the "system." The gap between rich and poor is striking and without action, more violence will be the consequence.

To point fingers and lay blame is the wrong approach to achieving peace, for it is a moot point. What matters today is restoration of equality, opportunity and justice for all.

For this to happen, all citizens of the United States must acquire an atmosphere of cooperation. To accomplish our goals, we must unite and work with each other. There is not place for anger, aggression or racism. We must unite as Americans with a common goal: to create a perfect society. This may be impossible, but we must die trying.

The American government is out of touch with its citizens, and the American people have lost control of their government. Again we could point fingers, but what would that accomplish? We need to spend our time targeting the problems to create solutions, not arguing and wasting time.

Every American should have equal access to education. For too long the educational system has benefited the rich and neglected the poor. It must be restructured to benefit those citizens who show the most promise and potential.

Every American should be afforded the opportunity to possess a steady job. Not welfare, not unemployment, but real work for decent wages. Jobs must be created, not tanks and missiles. Every American should have equal access to professional and affordable health care, regardless of race, gender, religion, sexual preference, income or whatever other categories ignorant people discriminate against.

These are just a few of the countless, complex issues that face contemporary American society. Today, America stands on shaky ground. With tension mounting daily, we must learn to use the system, not abuse it. If the system that governs America is ineffective, we must change it. These changes must be on a level of intellect, not aggression. For how can unity be created from the seeds of hatred?

It is your country, your life. If you are dissatisfied with the "system," it is up to you to initiate changes beneficial to us all. After all, waiting for someone else to solve your problems is just as bad as causing them yourself.

A letter of love

Like the sands through the hourglass, so are the issues of the Collegian . . .

Just seven more issues, and the Collegian goes into hibernation. You never know how much you love something until it goes away. And that's the kind of love that hurts most. We don't want to see you in pain, so we're going to make the most of these last moments together.

Don't leave without saying goodbye.

But we're not up to a long, tension-filled goodbye. So keep the letters short, please — absolutely no more than 50 lines. And type them, so we don't get eyestrain. And always sign your name, address and phone number, so we know who we're missing when these days are long past. We love you.

U.S. didn't play the part of fascists in Waco

I would like to respond to the column by Romin Thomson [Collegian, April 27] titled, "Fascism hits Waco, Texas."

The column portrays cult leader David Koresh as a poor innocent man persecuted for his beliefs. Thomson, in describing the cult's formation, states, "Then the man gathered in his listeners together and formed a community. And for this we killed him." He then goes on to try to tell us that Koresh in the same class as the "founding citizens of our nation." This is not true. When our founding fathers said, "live free or die," they were not saying brainwash anyone you can and rape them of their personal freedom. There is an enormous difference between the right to religious freedom and what happened in Waco.

Now I would like to address the idea that this whole situation was created by fascism on the part of the American government or media. I have just as much of a problem with our government as the next guy but we cannot go around giving blame where it does not belong. In doing so the real problem is avoided. It is time we started solving problems, not creating them by constant and malicious complaining.

Fascism is defined in my dictionary as "a system of government characterized by dictatorship, belligerent nationalism and racism, militarism, etc." To some extent many of these characteristics may be present within our society. But I would really like to know how calling us fascists and saying we killed the Branch Davidians is going to prevent this from happening in the future? It is sick individuals out to gain power and get attention who commit such acts. Koresh killed himself and most of his follows because he was so afraid to be proven wrong. He got so caught up in his own preachings that he did everything possible to make it look like there was some truth to what he was saying. We are not the fascists, we did not kill anyone, we were not the ones who made the decision to burn innocent people; Koresh and Hitler were

Director, cast elevate 'Bedroom Farce'

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

Bedroom Farce
Student Union Ballroom
April 30, 1993

There is a basic credibility gap in Bedroom Farce, the Alan Ayckbourn play which concluded the Theatre Guild season this weekend.

Bedroom is the story of three happy couples, living happy and ordinary lives. It is also the story of Susannah and Trevor, an oh-so-unhappily married pair who would like nothing better than a good divorce. The premise is simple enough: Susannah and Trevor act miserable and bitter, and their behavior highlights the insecurities of the other couples, who begin to worry about their own marriages. In the hands of a great playwright, the unnecessary re-examination of all these marriages could have been hilarious, or tragic, or both.

The problem is also simple: Ayckbourn is not that playwright. After quickly establishing that Susannah and Trevor are unhappy, he allows their unhappiness to evaporate. The couple have no connection to one another, no connection to the other couples, and their bothersome behavior seems at best innocuous. To make this venture pay off, the pair would have to be bristlingly hostile or insanely irritating, but Ayckbourn gives us neither of those things. This couple is only irritating in their unremitting dullness.

But that's the bad news. The good news is that director Benjamin Ware and the rest of the Guild production crew have overcome a spotty script to present a story surprisingly rich in humor and feeling. Ware is the original Renaissance man, a set designer for shows like Noises Off and a production manager for Sweeney Todd, an actor in Hair and A Midsummer Night's Dream. One might think he was tempting God to try directing as well, but it is his directorial style which makes this entire production such a success.

By grounding Ayckbourn's script, he downplays the comedy (most of which isn't very funny, anyway) and focuses instead on the relationships in the three bedrooms which set designer Craig Doescher presents to us.

The result is a series of carefully and richly drawn character sketches, encompassing every phase of married life. In bedroom one, we have Kate and Malcom (Laurie J. Beland and Patrick Browne) the newlywed couple who are still high on the concept of living together, and engage in such absurd games as hiding each others footwear. They are the most instantly likable of the couples, if only because of Beland and Browne's wonderfully appealing performances. Cast as a pair of porcelain dolls, they play their parts with deceptive ease. The other couples get to do more emoting, but none of them seem more natural in their parts.

The second bedroom is the most tempestuous of the three, containing the middle-aged and bed-bound Nick (Chad Marshall), whose wife Jan (Liana Maria Reda) harbors a not-so-secret love for Trevor. Everything about this relationship is grating and unpleasant, from Marshall's constant whining to Reda's cold contempt. They possess, in fact, the exact sort of antipathy that Susannah and Trevor do not. Their relationship is the center, both physically and emotionally, of the play. Marshall and Reda are talented actors in what might be unwelcome roles, but they make their characters likable and understandable despite of — or perhaps because of — their flaws.

In the final bedroom are the elderly Ernest and Delia (Benjamin Courtney and Nicole Higgins), an imperfect but happy pair of archetypal grandparents. Courtney has the play's most rewarding role, as a man more concerned with guttering and Tom Brown's School Days than with his 35th anniversary, and he plays it charmingly. Looking out from behind smudged spectacles and a wooly beard, his very appearance is enough to elicit cheers from the audience.

Already a stand-out designer (her costume work on American Buffalo is the best of the semester), Ms. Higgins also proves herself a capable actress. As the only character who seems entirely in control of their fate, Ms. Higgins overcomes both the challenge of playing a character three times her age, and the trial of enduring an "old woman" makeup job that would make the designers of For the Boys blush with shame (the wrinkles of age were evoked by bold black lines from nose to chin, which left the actress looking eerily like a ventriloquist dummy).

Although Janna Kovalcin and Raphie Aronwitz (as Susannah and Trevor) checked their charisma at the door, Ware's consistently understated direction elevated what began as a pedestrian comedy script into an effective examination of love and boredom in the nineties. It was more than Ayckbourn deserved.

Three of Hearts plays hand with loopy charm

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

The problem with love triangles is, no matter how you do the math, the end result isn't going to please everyone. In Yurek Bogayevicz's (Anna) new romantic comedy/drama Three of Hearts, the story is conventional, but the characters are not.

This breezy, enjoyable love letter of a movie doesn't break any new dramatic ground, but its themes and execution are profound — its matter-of-fact depiction of homosexuality as worthy of romantic gaze is refreshingly fun to watch. By the end, most of Three of Hearts' effervescent charm has petered out into melodrama, yet it isn't devastating to the movie's airy tone.

Connie, a twentysomething nurse (Kelly Lynch), has just been dumped by her bisexual girlfriend, Ellen (Sherilyn Fenn) in the middle of Washington Square. Naturally, this throws Connie for a loop. She was planning to bring Ellen to her sister's Polish wedding and come out to her parents.

She reluctantly hires studly male escort Joe (William Baldwin), to the wedding and then strikes up the idea to have Joe woo Ellen and then dump her, sending her back into Connie's arms. The best laid plans, as they say, go awry when Joe falls for Ellen (you knew that one was coming) and Connie is, well, upset.

What's good about Hearts is the first half, especially the scenes between lovesick lesbian Connie and hooker-with-a-heart-of-gold Joe. Lynch and Baldwin share the film's best chemistry, and it's almost a shame that they're both enamored with Ellen. As played by skin deep Fenn, she's seems vacuous and curiously dumb.

There is an underdeveloped (and totally unnecessary) subplot with disgruntled thugs chasing after Joe, that nags at the film's loopy feel. Yet for every dive into "Three's Company" mentality, Hearts does have its, eh-hem, heart and mind in the right places.

Connie herself is something of a marvel. Here's a bright, attractive, mentally stable career-woman who is also a lesbian. Lynch (so good in Drugstore Cowboy and so bad in Curly Sue) turns in the film's best performance, even though she's sidelined by the hetero love affair between Baldwin and Fenn. Whether she's matching wits with Baldwin or pining for Ellen from afar, Lynch is wonderfully dimensional and also very funny.

Baldwin does his best work since Internal Affairs, and he's better in the lighter, more comedic moments than the melodrama. It's a nice change of pace to have a guy be the bimbo and Baldwin uses his alluring eyes to maximum effect. Fenn is the only dim bulb in the group, as her hair proves more versatile than her acting.

Three of Hearts isn't a groundbreaking movie, nor even a particularly great one, but it is happily romantic and more fun than the drippy Benny & Joon. Hearts doesn't play its hand perfectly, but any movie that can make jokes about Pat Nixon and scrubbing clams fly is worth a look. B-

Inclined to play free show

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

For those of you dissatisfied with the state of new music, dissatisfied with its tendency to call upon simple riffs, three chords and banal lyrics. For those of you craving a greater musical ethic comes Inclined. For those of you with a light wallet and a bus schedule also comes Inclined.

From the smog infested air of Los Angeles comes a crystalline and polished musical sound of a trio of 23 year olds. Theirs is a surprisingly mature and refined sound for a band whose debut album has only recently hit the shelves.

Bright New Day (Chaos / Columbia Records) is the first release from Inclined, a clever marriage of rock, jazz and a touch of funk. The debut album is a clean and cohesive collection of compositions which seldom fail to foray into the musical limits of the band. From the first track, the sizzling "Two Minds" with its funky ambling guitar and precise lyrics, Bright New Day resembles a talented crop of bands from the Grateful Dead to the Police.

Inclined's musical skills do not end however at quality musicianship. Singer Miles Tackett's lyrics are insightful and inspiring, such as on "Leading to Light," "you got to know the sun to know the rain / you got to have love to know there's pain." Tackett's style is in perfect harmony with his musical backup, not to mention the fact he's a fine cellist. That's right cello, that same lovely instrument you would never hear on a Sub Pop album.

After listening to the band's debut, it should come as little surprise that Inclined stage show is one of little more than a skeleton of song upon which the band can branch out into a display of their musical talents and jamming abilities. Now comes the good part.

On Tuesday at Pearl Street, the band will be playing a FREE show. That's free as in don't bother descending the Campus Center elevator to frequent the cash machine of your preference. The fact that the show is at Pearl Street is an added bonus as you can hop on the PVTA and be dropped off practically at the front door.

As Tackett puts it, Inclined is always "looking to reach the next plateau. To create music that's always fresh and progressing in new directions." If Bright New Day is any indication of this prophecy, Inclined will be around for quite some time. What better to way to spend a Tuesday night without spending a cent.

Inclined play a free show at Pearl Street with guest Borderline on Tuesday May 4. Showtime is 9 p.m.

Mediocre thrills from They Might Be Giants

By DARIENNE HOSLEY
Collegian Staff

They Might Be Giants
Pearl Street
March 27,1993

They Might Be Giants' two-week mini-tour seemed to be a great opportunity; the band stopped in at small clubs and colleges away from the big cities — like in Maine. One of the drawbacks of such a tour, however, is that it is hastily planned and hastily rehearsed, and that seemed to be the problem at Pearl Street last Tuesday.

Brian Dewan, opening for TMBG, should have stayed home. His voice isn't bad, but his "music" should be buried. His songs were sometimes amusing, like one about those letters that threaten you with disaster if you break the chain.

But the vocals were undermined by discordant, crashing noises Dewan banged out on his lap-top slide guitar. It was hard not to feel sorry for him. The crowd responded with humiliating enthusiasm when Dewan introduced his last song. No one paid much attention when he finally snuck off stage.

On their 1992 tour TMBG introduced a live — and talented — backup band, and the chemistry was fantastic. They pulled together very tight and surprisingly hard-hitting, performances. The band, slightly modified, took the stage with Giants John Flansburgh and John Linnell Tuesday. Despite some fine playing by Linnell on accordion, Flansburgh on guitar and Pere Ubu's Tony Maimone on bass, they just didn't have it together.

The band trudged off with "Don't Let's Start" at a dragging tempo, perked up a little with a new song (sorry, title unknown), then a laid-back, lackluster "Ana Ng." The early songs were marred by noise — moments when music suddenly disintegrated into squawking. Trumpet player Frank London, introduced as soloist in more songs than I can remember, seemed to be the major perpetrator: his style of improv is to play lots and lots of notes, really fast.

They swung into gear with their "World Famous Polka," an inspired pop-polka romp and one of the many shining moments of the performance. Accordions just don't look the same after you've seen Linnell play the hell out of one.

The bouncing crowd gained at least a foot and a half in height for "Birdhouse in Your Soul," and the pop gem "Twisting" helped jack up the energy. A few new songs were introduced: "Spy," which can be heard on TMBG's Dial-a-Song, and "Thermometer," neither of which was quite as good as the anonymous song mentioned earlier.

Flansburgh apologized for his restrained performance; he was suffering from the flu, so the band dropped a few songs from the set list and passed on the second encore.

They closed on a good note: a riotous cover of "The Frankenstein," a hit on last year's tour. Despite frequent dips into mediocrity, TMBG's charm kept the show afloat. It wasn't worth a $15.50 ticket, but it was worth sitting through Dewan's painful set.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The emphasis today is on completing unfinished work. Pay keen attention to letters and reports. Flaws are not readily perceptible. Romance could find you on the rebound. Be careful.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cooperation is the key word today. Many black automobiles pass your way today — it is a sign of good luck. Select the best ideas and avoid day-dreaming.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Draw up a list of your objectives and do the groundwork as soon as possible. Unlikely alliances could work for you. Get agreements in writing to avoid problems.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Adjustment and compromise are the order of the day when you encounter basic differences of opinion. Move forward in gradual steps. Be accurate when writing important letters.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Strive to be more decisive; uncertainty could offset the results of your finest efforts. There is excellent equipment designed especially for your needs.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A loved one makes new demands. Avoid promising the moon. You need to focus on your own well-being and goals now. Spend money wisely, save it for a rainy day.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You should have easier sledding than many of your colleagues now. Be prompt and handle all matters logically. Listening to music will help you relax tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good day to finish a research project. Behind closed doors, you conduct business efficiently. Offer to shop or run errands for someone confined to a hospital.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day to shop for clothes or anything that says "you." It may be difficult to choose the right track to take at work. A brisk walk helps clear the cobwebs away.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Unexpected changes in a business arrangement could leave you angry. However, a check will bring a smile to your face. Loved one gives you an overdue pat on the back.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Follow through on a hunch. You have a rare opportunity to correct a mistake and recoup a loss. Needed information comes from new sources; use it effectively.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The emphasis today is on showcasing your creativity. Elements of good luck and timing are present — you could hit the jackpot!

minutes, the Gorillas got unassisted scores from Mike Valente and Mark Millon, bringing the crowd on the Hill into the game and prompting SU to call time-out.

UMass tied the score again, this time at 4-4, in the second. Chris Nentwich, who played an immense game at defensive midfield, scooped up a ground ball, sprinted the length of the field and scored, bringing the Hill to its collective feet.

But Syracuse, demonstrating the athleticism and skills that come from being the best-funded, best-recruiting lax program in the nation, capitalized on seemingly every UMass turnover or miscue in the third quarter, expanding a 7-4 halftime lead out to 12-6 third quarter cushion. Syracuse midfielder Steve Bettinger keyed the SU third quarter surge, figuring in on four of five scores with two goals and two assists.

The Orange lead grew to 16-8 midway through the fourth quarter when reserve attacker Jim Morrissey pumped in an unassisted score. That's when Mark Millon took over, and when he was through, there was no doubt in anyone's mind who the 1993 USILA player of the year should be.

"I looked up at the scoreboard and thought, 'No way are we losing to them 16-8,'" Millon said afterwards.

Millon took matters into his own hands, scoring four goals and assisting another in a five-minute span that saw UMass close the gap from 16-8 to 16-13 with 56 seconds left. The loud, orange-clad pack of SU fans who made the trip from Central New York were suddenly quiet and those UMass fans who stayed were on their feet.

However, Syracuse won their next-face-off and long stick defenseman Chad Smith cashed in for his second goal of the day — a true rarity for a long stick — and Millon's final score, an over the cage feed from Valente (two goals, four assists) ended the afternoon at 17-14.

"The way we didn't give up was pheonomenal," Garber said. "If we had 10 more minutes we would've beaten 'em. Now we have to beat Brown on Wednesday for the New England championship."

Syracuse coach Simmons Jr., whose Orange have defeated UMass 12 years in a row, said the UMass rush was partly his fault for pulling his starters too early.

"We let [Wes] Depp and Millon score a couple goals that, who knows, with our main horses in there, they might not have," Simmons Jr. said.

"At the end of the game we were overconfident," said Syracuse attacker Charlie Lockwood. "Give credit to UMass, they're a great team and they kept their heads up."

unassisted goals five minutes apart and teammate Dom Fin added another to up the 'Cuse lead to 7-4 at the half.

Syracuse came out of the locker room and scored three more to up the lead to 10-4. The Orangemen never looked back.

"We played a good first half and were only down 7-4," said senior All-American Mark Millon. "But the two quick goals they scored at the beginning of the second half were tough."

It would have been easy for the Gorillas to roll over and give up when they trailed 16-7 in the fourth quarter. But, much to their credit, they did not and when Wes Depp scored with just under a minute remaining in the game, UMass only trailed 16-13. When Millon (six goals) scored with 13 seconds left, Massachusets players had to be saying to themselves, "if only we had more time."

"Coach (Ted Garber) already talked about keeping our heads up and concentrating on the rest of the regular season," said Millon. "But we'd love another crack a Syracuse in the tournament - I think we could beat them."

baseman Chris Wadja and third baseman Chris Woodman.

Sophomore hurler Kelly Daut took the loss for UMass, her ninth of the year. Daut gave up two runs on five hits and walked one. UConn starter Pat Conlan, who also pitched the entire Florida State game two hours earlier, picked up her second win of the day and 21st of the year.

Florida State handed the Bulls their second 1-0 loss of the day in the next game behind the pitching of junior right-hander Rebecca Aase, who increased her record to 15-1.

The Huskies sealed the championship on Sunday with a 2-1 victory over USF. Senior Janna Venice did it all for UConn as she pitched a complete game two-hitter and scored the game's winning run in the bottom of the eighth on a suicide squeeze by junior second baseman Shari Blackman.

UMass-FSU was the last game on tap for the Classic, and the Lady Seminoles took it to the Minutewomen, defeating them 5-0.

MARSHALL QUALIFIES FOR WORLD UNIVERSITY GAMES:

Senior gymnast Tammy Marshall finished third in the all-around at the World University Games trials at Salt Lake City, Utah, late Saturday night, earning her a place among the six best gymnasts in the United States at the Games in Buffalo, N.Y.

Marshall qualified for the Games two years ago when they were held in England, but an injury kept her from competing. This year, however, Marshall is peaking at the right time, coming off of her perfect ten on the floor routine which win her the national championship.

Orangemen defeat Gorillas . . . again

Syracuse over UM, 17-14

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

Eric Triolo is shown in Saturday's lacrosse game against Syracuse. The Gorillas scored eight goals in the final period against Syracuse University, but still lost 17-14.

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team gave Syracuse all it could handle Saturday afternoon, but the Orangemen converted on UMass' mistakes and weathered a fierce fourth-quarter rally to walk away from Garber Field with a hard-fought 17-14 win.

The loss dropped UMass to 9-3, but did not hurt them in the polls. They dropped only one slot in the latest USILA rankings, from seventh to a tie for eighth with Loyola (Md.), and are now ahead of Hofstra (who beat UMass in early April) and Army, whom they will face this Saturday at West Point.

UMass coach Ted Garber said he is certain the Gorillas must win at least one of their remaining two games (Brown and Army) to guarantee a spot in the NCAA tournament. He also believes two wins would fetch UMass a first-round home game.

UMass, playing before 4,089 sunburnt fans — the biggest home lacrosse crowd on campus since their '91 match with SU at Alumni Stadium — went toe-to-toe with the third-ranked Orange in the first half. Two typically quick Syracuse scores in the last minute of the half made the halftime count 7-4 instead of 5-4, but UMass was still very much in it.

UMass might've been more than "in it" had it not been for the outstanding play of Syracuse goalie Chris Surran. Surran, who collected his 400th career save yesterday, stoned the Gorillas on a number of shots in the first half and watched three or four others hit the crossbar.

"When Chris has a big day like that he can really carry us," said SU coach Roy Simmons, Jr. "But we let him down at the end."

Surge comes too late for UMass

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Prior to Saturday's game, many people said this was the year the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team would beat Syracuse University for the first time since 1981, when UMass won 12-8.

After all, the Gorillas were the seventh ranked team in the nation, they were playing in the friendly confines of the Hill for the first time since 1985 and there was no Gait (Gary and Paul) factor to contend with. Just the same, the third-ranked Orangemen proved to be too much for the Gorillas, as their high-powered offense scored 17 goals and their defense held off a late surge by UMass en-route to a 17-14 victory.

"We're happy we won but it's disappointing that we were up eight goals and ended up winning by only three," said Syracuse's All-American attacker Charlie Lockwood. "They (UMass) made a great run at the end of the game (six goals in four minutes) and you have to give them credit because they really held their heads up even though they were losing 16-7."

UMass stayed with Syracuse for much of the first half, but at 9:46 of the second, the Orangemen began a 6-0 run which took the wind out of the Minutemen's sails and quieted the partisan Massachusetts crowd at Richard F. Garber field. With the score tied 4-4, Syracuse's Roy Colsey scored two

UConn Huskies shine in Classic, UMass goes 1-2

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Connecticut softball team, displaying some clutch hitting and superb pitching, swept through the University of Massachusetts, Florida State University, and the University of Southern Florida en route winning the Diamond Classic Championship this weekend at Totman Field.

Florida State finished second with a 2-1 record, followed by host UMass at 1-2, with South Florida bringing up the rear, going winless for their northern trip at 0-3.

UConn set the tone for the tourney the very first game on Saturday when they upset No. 6 ranked Florida State 4-1, handing the Seminoles their first-ever loss in the Diamond Classic and tarnishing the perfect record of Florida State starter Marla Looper who entered the contest with a 16-0 record.

The Minutewomen picked up their only win in the second game of the day, defeating the Bulls of South Florida 1-0 in eight innings. UMass scored the game's only run in the bottom of the eighth when, with one out, senior catcher Sherri Kuchinskas singled to center and was chased home by a double to left field by junior first baseman Rachel Lawson.

Senior Darlene Claffey registered the win, upping her record to 11-6. Claffey pitched eight innings of shutout ball, striking out two while scattering five hits.

UConn was up next for UMass as the two schools renewed their long rivalry with the Huskies prevailing by a 2-0 score. UConn got one run in the third when sophomore left fielder Andrea D'Innocenzo lofted a fly ball to center field with pinch runner Kathy Flores tagging at third base.

Minutewoman center fielder Heather Dorsey caught the ball and threw to Kuchinskas, who was doing her best to block the plate. The ball and Flores arrived simultaneously with the call going in UConn's favor. The Huskies added an insurance run in the sixth with back-to-back doubles to the left-center gap by first

Baseball stays in A-10 hunt, wins two at URI

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts baseball team continued to feast at the plate, scoring 34 runs and winning two out of three games against URI last weekend.

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

With its back to the wall in the race for the Atlantic 10 tournament, the University of Massachusetts baseball team traveled to Kingston, R.I. this weekend and swept two of three games against the University of Rhode Island.

The Minutemen (16-18, 8-9 A-10) used tremendous pitching by the one-two right-handed punch of Jay Murphy and Jeff Toothaker to drub URI on Saturday, 10-4 and 18-1. However, UMass fell short in the series finale to the Rams on Sunday by the score of 11-6.

Murphy, a redshirt sophomore, pitched his third complete game in a row in the early contest on Saturday, allowing only two hits, and giving up no earned runs. Murphy walked three while striking out four, raising his record to 4-0.

UMass jumped on Rhody starter Steve Cote early, lighting him up for three runs in the first inning, four in the second, and two more in the third. First baseman Bill Knight put the Minutemen ahead 3-0 with his fifth dinger of the season, and left fielder Justin Howard added insult later in the game with his fifth homer of the season as well.

In the second game, the first frame would prove deadly for Rhody as well, with starter Brian Page and reliever Everett Jackson getting touched up for seven runs by the Minutemen.

Knight was the offensive star of the weekend, going 7-for-10, driving in and scoring five runs. The tandem of Howard and Knight struck again with the same scenario as in the first game. After Howard doubled, Knight hit his second home run of the day, giving Toothaker all of the support he would need.

The senior hurled his second consecutive complete game, a three-hit masterpiece, giving up one unearned run while striking out two. Toothaker (5-5) had a no-hitter through four innings, until third baseman Ralph Cerrato singled to left, breaking up the right-hander's quest for perfection.

"[Murphy and Toothaker] both did a great job," said head coach Mike Stone. "They threw strikes, got ahead of the hitters, and kept the balls down."

Whatever pitching the Minutemen had on Saturday was lacking in the finale, as starter Jim Telgheder picked up his fifth loss of the season. Stone had to use four pitchers on the day including Telgheder, and the staff was roughed up for 11 runs on 12 hits.

URI made the first inning exciting once again for both clubs, as the Rams scored three runs on center fielder Hiram Barber's fourth HR on the season.

The closest the Minutemen would get was 4-3 in the third inning after shortstop Greg LaRocca hit a three-run blast, his fourth of the season.

However, Rhody starter Derek Leahy would get all of the run support he needed, going the distance for his fourth win of the season.

UMass was tied for fourth in the A-10 with two other teams after Saturday's action. The Minutemen host Temple for three crucial games next weekend, but first entertain Northeastern University tomorrow at 3 p.m. at Earl Lorden Field.

Allies balk at U.S. plan to use force

By BARRY SCHEID
Associated Press

PARIS — Hesitant European allies withheld approval of President Clinton's strategy to use force in Bosnia on Monday, pushing in the meantime for peacekeeping troops to oversee the agreement signed Sunday by Bosnian Serbs.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said he was skeptical that the peace agreement would hold up. A senior U.S. official on the trip said the United States would support the plan if the Serbs did follow through.

The United State might commit about 2,000 troops as part of a first phase, diplomatic sources said.

His task was shaping up as a test of the Clinton administration's powers of persuasion as well as of the strength of the transatlantic alliance.

Christopher left Britain without specific endorsement of either air strikes against Serb artillery sites or the lifting of a weapons embargo that has hampered outgunned Muslims in Bosnis-Herzegovina. Prime Minister John Major is concerned that the war could be expanded if more weapon reach Bosnia.

And, arriving in Paris, Christopher found the French government in a dissonant mood. Foreign Minister Alain Juppe has described the division of tasks in the U.S. strategy as unacceptable.

Juppe said that the planned U.S. air role would mean "having some flying in planes and dropping bombs and others, the Europeans," searching for cover on the ground.

France, with 5,000 troops in Bosnia and Croatia on humanitarian missions, is concerned that an allied assault on the Serbs could expose them to new dangers.

The British and French prefer putting the emphasis on such measures as protecting civilians in Bosnian cities and villages with "safe havens." The job could require up to 50,000 troops, including thousands of Americans.

Christopher, expressing doubt that the Bosnian Serbs intend to adhere to the peace agreement signed Sunday in Athens, said in London: "We're all quite skeptical and we're not going to be deterred. We are not going to be thrown off stride."

Other Bosnian Serb leaders have questioned the plan, which calls for a cease-fire, and interim government in Sarajevo and establishment of 10 canton along ethnic lines. They are also hinting the Bosnian Serb assembly would reject the plan on Wednesday, as it has rejected settlements twice before.

Karadzic told Belgrade's Politick radio: "Clinton is in a difficult situation, but I hope he's not going to shoot, because a new process has been opened for a peaceful solution of the Bosnian crisis."

Clinton said Christopher's meetings with the allies were "going great." He said in Washington, "We have agreed that we're gong to keep the pressure up and have a united front and move forward, and we're developing our policy now."

Updike to address '93 graduates

World renown author to be commencement speaker

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

World renown author John H. Updike, pop/jazz singer Natalie Cole, and President and Chief Executive Officer of General Motors John F. Smith Jr. will receive honorary degrees May 23 at the University of Massachusetts' undergraduate commencement.

Updike, who will receive an honorary doctor of humane letters and be the keynote speaker, won the Pulitzer Prize, National Book Critics, and the American Book Award in 1982 for his novel, Rabbit is Rich.

For the short story, The Centaur, Updike received the O. Henry Award for fiction in 1966. Other awards Updike has received have been PEN/Malamud Memorial Prize, PEN/Faulkner Award Foundation, National Book Award and the Medal of Honor in Literature. Updike has published over 10 compilations of his essays, written over 12 novels, 15 poetry books, and over 20 short stories.

"Updike has earned an. . . imposing stance on the literary landscape, earning virtually every American literary award, repeated best-sellerdom and the near-royal status of the American author-celebrity," wrote Los Angeles Times contributor Katherine Stephen.

The 1987 movie, "Witches of Eastwick" was broadly based on Updike's book Witches of Eastwick. His book, Rabbit, Run, was made into a movie by Warner Bros. in 1970, and Bech: A Book was made into the play, "Bech Takes Pot Luck", in 1979. Updike's book, Two Far to Go His, was made in 1979 by the National Broadcasting Company to be a television movie. Three years later, it was release for the theater by Sea Cliff Productions.

"There is a great deal to be said about anything. Everything can be as interesting as every other thing. An old milk carton is worth a rose. . . . The idea of a hero is aristocratic. Now either nobody is a hero or everyone is. I vote for everyone," said Updike to Jane Howard of Life magazine during an interview.

Natalie Cole, who graduated from the University in 1972 with a bachelor of arts degree in psychology, will receive an honorary doctorate of fine arts. Her recent songs, both remakes, "Pink Cadillac" and "Unforgettable" were top 10 hits. Her 1977 platinum album, Unpredictable, had a number of hits such as "I've Got Love on My Mind" and "Party Lights." That year she was nominated for a Grammy, and in 1978 she was awarded Female Vocalist of the Year at the Eleventh Annual Image Awards. She received her star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame in February 1979.

Her junior year she went on exchange to the University of Southern California. Between the summer of her junior and senior year, Cole filled in for a singer with strep throat in the group Black Magic. But at the time, Cole thought of singing as a hobby.

Smith, who will receive an honorary doctorate of law, graduated in 1960 with a bachelor's in business administration. Luis Fuentes, the director of the University's Bilingual-Multicultural Education Program for 16 years, will receive an honorary doctorate of public service.

Joan Wallace-Benjamin, president and chief executive officer of the Urban League of Eastern Massachusetts, will also receive an honorary doctorate of public service. She is a former deputy director of Boston's Head Start program.

Yeltsin backs police in May Day march melee

By THOMAS GINSBERG
Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin said Monday that police acted legally when they blocked a May Day march that turned into Moscow's bloodiest confrontation since the 1991 coup.

A hard-line leader blamed the government for the violence, and said protesters would march again Sunday, this time to the city center "no matter what." The government has not said whether it will block the march.

Saturday's street melee erupted during a march by Russian nationalists and pro-Communists. When police blocked marchers from leaving their authorized route, protestors hurled bricks, sticks and flag poles at police, who fought back with truncheons, shields and water cannons.

The Interior Ministry said 205 police were injured with 27 hospitalized, the Interfax news agency said.

Officials have estimated that at least 70 protesters were hurt. At least 20 people were arrested, fined and released reports said.

Rally organizers said marchers were unarmed and had the right to rally anywhere they wanted. They said Yeltsin's side started the unrest as a pretext for a general crackdown.

Yeltsin's aides and police claimed some protesters had iron rods and marched head-on into police to provoke a fight that could be used against Yeltsin politically.

"I've seen film and it was dreadful," Yeltsin told residents in suburban Zelonograd, shown by Russian television. "The militia was acting clearly in accordance with instructions. . . . They were acting clearly in accordance with the law."

"We will not allow ourselves to be shamed."

Russia's prosecutor has begun an investigation. Parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov has announced a separate investigation to be headed by a hard-line parliament member.

The president's office said Yeltsin was considering a third investigation, Interfax reported.

Hundreds of anti-Yeltsin protester rallied later Monday at the parliament building, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported.

Speakers called on protesters to maintain their vigil at the 19-story white marble building until Sunday.

"We're going to have to fight, fight, fight!" declared a 43-year-old man who gave his name as Ivan Ivanov. "We will not allow ourselves to be shamed."

Viktor Anpilov, a hard-line organizer, said protesters would march to the city center Sunday "no matter what," ITAR-Tass reported.

The most seriously hurt policeman from Saturday's march remained in extremely critical condition Monday, a spokeswoman for Clinical Hospital No. 1 said. The Interfax news agency said his skull had been broken and chest crushed between two trucks.

Drinking good for your heart?

By PAUL RECER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A drink or two, or even three, every day can help keep your heart healthy by increasing the amount of "good" cholesterol in the blood, a researcher reports.

In a study of 680 people, Dr. J. Michael Gizano of Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston said he found that those who consumed up to three alcoholic drinks daily were less apt to suffer from myocardial infarctions, a type of heart attack.

But he warned that this does not mean it is healthy to get drunk. The healthy heart benefit comes only from what he called "drinking in moderation."

Gizano presented his study at the national Clinical Research Meeting over the weekend.

Gizano interviewed people about their drinking habits and then compared their blood levels of high-density lipoproteins (HDL), the so-called "good" cholesterol. Earlier studies have shown that people with normal levels of HDL have a reduces risk of heart disease.

Gizano said he talked to 340 patients who had suffered myocardial infarctions and 340 patients who had no history of such heart attacks. He adjusted the date for the statistical effects of risk factors such as age and smoking.

The result, he said, shows that those who drank daily in moderation had fewer heart attacks.

"We find that in the subjects that consumed the higher level of alcohol (at least three drinks daily) the risk of cardiovascular disease went down," he said.

For people who did not drink or did not drink every day, there was no statistical reduction in heart attack risk, he said.

People who drank one to three drinks daily had a 45 percent reduction in heart attack rate, and those who took three or more drinks daily had a 50 percent reduction in heart attack rate.

Gizano said there were not enough data to reflect the health effects of excessive drinking, but he noted that there are a number of studies that show drinking to inebriation is unhealthy.

In blood tests on the patients, Gizano said there was a direct link between drinking and an increase in the good cholesterol.

"It seems clear from our date that alcohol is protective (against heart disease) in moderation,": he said. "One or more drinks a day seems to confer a protective effect."

In counting the number of drinks consumed, Gizano said the study considered 13 grams of alcohol to be one drink. This, he said, is the amount in a typical American beer or in a glass of wine.

The Clinical Research Meeting, where the study was presented, is a joint national convention of the American Federation of Clinical Research, the American Society for Clinical Investigation and the Association of American Physicians. About 3,600 medical researchers attended the four-day gathering.

Students give Amherst day-long rejuvenation

By ANDREW LUMB
Collegian Staff

A line of about 400 students stretched nearly the length of a football field, four or five deep, as an army of volunteers marched from the University of Massachusetts "Into Amherst," intent on making the town shine.

Pool painting, planting flowers, cleaning up the Amherst Town common and various bike trails, building a playground and painting benches were some of the projects planned.

Saturday morning University students, faculty and employees rallied with townspeople and five-college students to hear praise from state Rep. Ellen Story, who lauded the event as a good way to "bridge the town and the University," state Sen. Stanley Rosenberg; University of Massachusetts Chancellor Richard O'Brien and Town Manager Barry Del Castilho.

Present were representatives from the three fraternity organizations who together comprised over 100 of the volunteers, the IFC, Panhel and PanHellenic; SCALE, Student Coalition for Action in Literacy Education; the Mullin's Center, and Leisure Services, the town's recreation department.

The students spread out from Amherst Common to cover the entire town: Crocker Farms, the Amherst Survival Center, the Regional High School, the Hitchcock Center, Puffer's Pond, and Amethyst trails, among others.

It was ground-breaking day for a playground-building project spanning three to five years at Crocker Farms elementary school. University students worked alongside a bulldozer and a crane to build a slide, monkey bars and a two-tier sandbox.

The project was developed by students at the Conway School of Landscape Design and supported in part by Cantone's Pizza Company, which donated half of all its orders. The monkey bars are certain to be safe, as an expert in building suspension bridges in the rainforest lent his experience.

It seemed there was not a bench left to sit on or fence to lean on in the entire town after the project, as volunteers managed to hunt down and paint almost every bench and fence.

A mountain of bags of garbage were piled up in trucks to be hauled down to the dump, the work of the army of people picking up and sweeping around the town.

At the Mill River recreational center, students had their hands full stenciling the water depth markers by the side of the swimming pool. The pool would have been painted, but Leisure Services deemed it

Ivatury wins presidency in Graduate Senate race

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

The recent Graduate Student Senate elections gave the organization a new set of officers for next year.

The results of the election have not been formerly ratified according to the office manager of the Graduate Student Senate, David J. Lafond. They will be ratified at tonight's meeting, which Lafond said will be the last of the semester.

The tentative election results showed Shyamala Ivatury winning the presidential election with 167 votes over Tris Carpenter with 164 votes. Julia Mahoney took the vice-presidential race uncontested with 254 votes.

Julia Johnson won the race for treasurer with 178 votes over Kathleen Fitzgerald. The bid for executive officer went to Darrin Shaffer with 168 votes over Kimberly Pedigo with 112 votes.

There has been a call for a recount, said Lafond. Because Ivatury won by only three votes, the results for the presidential race will be recounted by the Senate Elections Committee.

Lafond said the recount will probably not result in a new election, but that decision is up to the Elections Committee, chaired by Karen Adkins.

The Elections Committee will recount the votes, review the results and make a recommendation to the general meeting.

Newly elected officials will not be positioned in the Graduate Student Senate office until they have been ratified by the general meeting.

Only two of the officers, the president and the treasurer, will be on duty for the summer session.

The new officers will begin their terms on June 1.

Sex roles said unjust

Male supremacy a topic for author

How does the concept of masculinity promote sexism? Does gender exist? How many sexes are there?

Author John Stoltenberg, scheduled to speak in the Campus Center Auditorium tomorrow night, argues gender roles are a social construct that must be left behind to achieve justice.

The lecture, entitled Gender and Justice: What Makes Inequality Sexy?," is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program.

"John Stoltenberg is the kind of speaker the members of DVP love," said Scott Kaufman, DVP co-facilitator. "He is encouraging students to get involved in change; he is challenging men to evaluate their lives."

Stoltenberg is the author of Refusing to be a Man: Essays on Sex and Justice, a novel examination of male sexual identity.

Stoltenberg writes to men, providing a way to overcome what he sees as the male-supremist views that foster rape, violence against women, pornography and war.

"I've come to realize that those of us who are penised humans need to learn the importance of loving justice more than we learn the importance of loving justice more than we love manhood," Stoltenberg said in a recent phone interview. "The sooner we do, and the more of us who do, the better all of our relationships and the better our world will be."

Brian Oats, a founding member of the UMass student group Men Acting for Change, said, "We are looking forward to this opportunity to get more men involved in our group. It will be exciting to see how many different types of men show up to listen and question John Stoltenberg."

Sailor admits to murder

Claims death of gay man unintentional

By DAVID THURBER
Associated Press

YOKOSUKA, Japan — An American sailor confessed Monday that he stomped a homosexual shipmate to death last fall, but said he was drunk and did not plan the killing.

Airman Apprentice Terry M. Helvey, 21, of Westland. Mich., sought to avoid a premeditated murder charge. The judge at his court martial did not immediately accept the plea.

At the pretrial hearing, Helvey admitted kicking Allen Schindler repeatedly in the head and stomach, even after Schindler fell unconscious.

"I remember hitting him in the face and stomping on his neck and kicking him in the groin." Helvey testified at Yokosuka Naval Base, headquarters of the U.S. 7th Fleet, southwest of Tokyo.

Schindler, 22, was found dead in October in a public restroom in Sasebo in southwestern Japan, where their ship, the amphibious assault ship USS Belleau Wood is based.

Schindler's mother, who identified the body, said his head was caved in, his genitals mutilated and all but two ribs broken.

Gay-rights activists say the killing illustrated a pervasive animosity toward homosexuals in the U.S. military.

Helvey, who said he did not remember everything about the incident because he was drunk, testified he lied in previous statements when he claimed Schindler made sexual advances just before the killing, but he gave no reason for the attack.

Schindler had told the Navy of his homosexuality in September and was awaiting mandatory discharge when he was killed.

Helvey was charged with premeditated murder, which carries a maximum penalty of death. He entered a guilty plea to murder with intent to inflict great bodily harm, which carries a maximum sentence of life of prison.

The judge, Cmdr. David P. Holcombe, did not indicate whether the plea would be accepted at the next pretrial hearings, set for May14.

Schindler's mother, Dorothy Hajdys of Chicago Heights, Ill., said she would be satisfied if Helvey was sentenced to life in prison.

"I'm glad he finally admitted to what he did, which was to kill my son," she said in a telephone interview from her home.

Helvey, wearing a white uniform with no insignia, showed no emotion and answered the judge's questions with a clear voice punctuated by "yes, sir" and no, sir."

Women guns owners not necessarily safe or secure

My father has one, my brother has one, my mother refuses to have one, and I'm not sure if I want to have one. It's a gun, and it's something I have to think about seriously.

Ever since I can remember, my father has been an owner of guns and most recently, my brother has joined the growing population of gun owners. And now with the concern of violence in every aspect of society, I've begun to think that maybe learning how to properly use a gun should be part of my lifestyle too.

Nicole
BURKE

My dad was actually the one to spark my interest in owning a gun. He said he would take me to the proper classes, help with all the financial costs, and finally guide me in the purchase of my very own gun. According to a recent article in Glamour, 15 million women own firearms. So what about me? Should I join the ranks?

Guns do give a sense of security to women; if a woman owns one then she thinks that she is automatically safe.

This can be true only if the woman has been properly trained to handle a gun, has the mental attitude that the shooting she does will be in self-defense, and keeps the gun close by. If I were attacked in my bedroom and my gun was hidden in my closet, I would not even be able to get near it.

And of course there are the situations when someone other than the properly trained person might find the gun, like young children, and there could be an accidental shooting.

Another situation could be the time when an attacker might turn around and use the gun against the woman. If this occurs, the woman is completely helpless and more often times than not — dead.

Buying a gun is a decision that a woman should think about carefully and wisely. The gun should not just be the only source of a woman's security; she should use the gun as part of her whole safety strategy.

Her other safety measures should include not walking alone at night, parking in well-lit areas, installing secure locks on doors, being aware of one's surroundings, buying a whistle, mace, the handle of a hairbrush — anything. The safety precautions are endless. Women must learn how to be safe anywhere, at anytime, gun or no gun.

I still do not know whether or not I will buy a gun. All those action adventure movies make it seem like it's the "in" thing to do, but I need to be able to feel within myself that if it came down to saving my life and using a gun, I would be strong enough and comfortable enough to make that choice as my personal right to defend myself.

Looking back at four years

A professor once remarked to her class that in the course of a college career it's the things that happen outside the classroom that end up being the most memorable. I keep thinking about that because my four-year term at the University of Massachusetts is just about to expire.

"Graduation: you hear about it, but you never think it'll happen to you."

Luke
ERICKSON

My friend John "Sarge" Borgeson, UMass '91, put that on his message board during his final semester here to remind himself about the inevitable — the real world.

Chances are I'll remember more of things I wrote and saw on dorm message boards than anything I read on the classroom blackboards.

UMass no longer has a physical education requirement, but for anyone over six feet tall who can dribble a basketball, an evening on the courts of Boyden gymnasium seems to be a must.

Humiliation was the name of the game when myself and three fellow freshman took it upon ourselves on a Saturday evening to play a little pickup basketball at Boyden. Though I was the tallest man on the court, all five of my opponents could (and did) outmuscle and outweigh me, as well as my fellow teammates. We lost 22-0, shooting about seven times from the floor. I have yet to play there again.

But not all my basketball memories are so horrible — just the ones in which I was a player. As a spectator, it turns out I came here at just the right time to see the rebirth of UMass basketball.

Most people talk about beating Syracuse last year to go the NCAA Tournament Sweet Sixteen, but for me the sweetest moment was Tony Barbee's 20-footer at the buzzer to force an overtime against Siena in 1991.

It also meant another long bus ride. Three times I shelled out for eight-hour-plus rides, twice to Philadelphia ("Hey, Ed — check out the name of that liquor store: Booze City!"). But who can forget all the sports talk on the way up and all the, well, liquid consumption on the way back. Unfortunately, UMass lost on all three trips I took.

Of course, after all the classes, lectures, discussion sections, there has been the UMass culinary experience. To the dining commons or not to the dining commons was the question. Lately, I've been forgoing the former in favor of going out to eat. Not particularly good on the wallet, but better on the palate. After all, who can stand fajitas 17 times a month?

Finally, living in the dorms for four years has been an undergoing unto itself — the front lines for the administration's indoctrination attempts, an assault of posters, bulletin boards and meaningless house councils, soldiered by the thought police: residential assistants and directors, most of whom either care too much, or not at all.

Seriously, it's also been my true home since high school, since my parents moved away from my hometown once I graduated. Watching movies on the VCR, partaking of the finer refreshments available at the local establishments (Look, guys, once I run the Boston Marathon I'll have a beer with you!) and hanging around with a small group of friends, an "odd little family" as we call it, has been quite rewarding.

I think the tour guide from (at-the-time) ULowell said it best — to a group of parents: "College is a period of life where you spend the most amount of time with people your own age: you go to class together, you eat together, you sleep [long nervous pause] at the same time. . ."

I never said it was the smoothest way to say it.

Wake up and smell the moment

What an opportunity, breathing and walking, seeing and hearing, touching and being. We spend our lives as if in a dream. Living on roadways of the mind, we are constantly going around in a circle. Creating goals, creating dreams, creating good and evil, creating black and white, creating life and death. All are of no substance. Just more highways running through our minds.

Try to find their reality and they will escape you. Where are they? We have been fooled from the start. On we go riding the highways to nowhere.

Pick any random moment of the day and ask yourself, "Where am I?" No, not location wise (i.e. next to the library), but truly where are you? Are you reliving the fight with your roommate over and over? Are you dreaming of the summer, or of next year, or the year after? Are you agonizing over a lost chance, or a mistake?

What a shame to come to the end of your days and realize that you were never really here; feeling the texture of this paper, smelling the smells around you, being with whatever it is you are doing. For in the end these are the only things we can truly own.

We can own this moment, right now, no matter what it is. We never reach those goals or those idealized times or states of being. Because even if we do, we probably won't realize it. Chances are we will be on another highway, dreaming our moments away. Wake up! Feel this paper, see the person next to you, taste your food. Don't think you will ever be anywhere else. You are only here, right now.

Ill-informed columnist should be impeached

To Michael Morrissey: I find every column you write to be filled with ignorance and poor writing. I think you should quit the paper or rethink the way you write. Your criticism of President Clinton [Collegian, April 29] illustrates my point.

You say you are offended that Clinton would hire people who would hire illegal aliens. This is a fair attack, as it is against the law, but then you attack the women for raising their children and for allowing those said children to be raised by people who are illegal aliens and have "no understanding of American culture."

First, hiring a babysitter or nanny is not a classification for neglect. Secondly, saying that an illegal alien knows nothing about American culture is classifying all illegal aliens into a group of ignorant people, which is ethnocentric.

Presuming that you have never met the said illegal aliens, the statement has no validity and is only a slur that you used to give the outside appearance of strengthening your view.

You state that Clinton does not have Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Colin Powell's support on allowing gays into the military. You conclude that this means Clinton does not have the military behind him. For the president to have a different opinion than the leading commander of the military does not mean that he doesn't have the military as a force behind him.

You state that the "accomplishment" of women being able to fly combat missions in jet airplanes is "useless garbage that passes for news." You as well, however, state that there have been "years and years of heated debate, protest and many needless deaths over this issue" and that it is "important for the issue of civil rights."

It seems that not only are there a good amount of people that find this an extremely important issue but you as well find it "important for civil rights." This contradicts your statement that this "accomplishment" is "useless garbage."

"I promise to faithfully execute. . . the laws of the United States. . . Clinton hasn't executed jack so far, a violation of the oath he took 100 days ago. Do you think we should impeach him?" This statement is an outright lie. As you mentioned yourself, women will now be allowed to fly airplanes in combat missions. It seems more likely that Clinton has not executed anything that you find important.

It is not your opinion that I disagree with, I just feel that your writing is ignorant, illogical and has at times been hurtful, racist and sexist.

Ex-coaches hang on at students' expense

"Former head coach Bob Pickett was named associate athletic director for external affairs at [UMass] yesterday," reported in the Springfield Union News April 28, 1993. If I were still a student at UMass I would be outraged by this announcement. I would be especially angry if I were paying an exorbitant athletic fee, in addition to an astronomical tuition bill.

These ex-coaches don't disappear, they are able to to stay on the state payroll performing tasks as useful as those of the doorkeepers at the Statehouse. I suppose that there is precedent, Matt Zunic and Vic Fusia hung around after they quit coaching.

Pickett's is not an isolated case, there are hundreds of staff people at various locations in the state university system waiting for their pension. There is no need to wonder why tuition rises every year.

The next time the student body decides to raise hell over the high cost of a state education, send them over to your new athletic director and ask him to justify the bloated staff he has assembled.

Stoltenberg holds a master's from both the Union Theological Seminary and Columbia University, where he specialized in playwriting and theater.

After being influenced by many of his feminist friends, Stoltenberg began to write speeches challenging men to question their role in supporting male supremacy.

"Ultimately it is not possible to support one's belief in gender polarity (or 'sex difference') without maintaining gender hierarchy (which in our culture is male supremacy). Clinging to 'sex difference' is clinging to male supremacy," Stoltenberg wrote in Refusing to be a Man.

Stoltenberg said he believes activism is a necessary part of working toward social change.

"If your struggle is to know who you are and why are here, you can't really find an answer without actively engaging in making the world a more just and humane place," Stoltenberg said. "Personal growth without active commitment to social change isn't real personal growth."

Soldiers wear dresses in West Bank conflict

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — "Can I help you, ladies?" Mansour Shawa asked the Palestinian women waiting outside his home. In response, one of them lifted her skirt, pulled out a pistol and pointed it at Shawa.

The others stormed into Shawa's West Bank house and arrested five suspected Palestinian militants.

The women, it turned out, were male Israeli soldiers, taking advantage of social mores in which women are not seen as combatants and can move around freely.

"Women are out of the game and both sides don't mess with them," said Yoram Binur, an Israeli journalist who covers the occupied territories.

Cloak and dagger tactics have taken a new twist in the Israeli-Arab conflict. Israelis sometimes use female dress to stalk Palestinians, and Palestinians do the same to elude roadblocks or approach assassination targets.

The traditional Arab women's dress is an ideal costume. The long, loose dress can hide hefty men and heavy weapons, while a head scarf covers the hair and much of the face.

In the raid on Shawa's house, seven of the soldiers wore gray robes and white scarves. The eighth wore lipstick, makeup and a short shirt to make it easier to get his gun.

Shawa, mayor of the West Bank village of Bir Zeit, had a typical Palestinian reaction. "If one hadn't pulled a gun, I wouldn't have known they were men," he said.

Palestinian lore has it that shortly after the West Bank and Gaza Strip were captured in the 1967 Mideast war, PLO chief Yasser Arafat slipped away in a dress moments ahead of Israeli troops.

In April 1973, a young Israeli officer named Ehud Barak pulled a blond wig over his black, curly hair and applied lipstick and mascara. His mission; a commando raid in downtown Beirut to assassinate three PLO leaders.

"I remember the strange feeling I had dressed up as a woman, with heavy makeup." Barak, now the army's chief of staff, wrote in a recent newspaper article.

The five year Palestinian uprising has spawned army undercover squads codenamed "Samson" and "Cherry." Israelis got a look at them in a June 1991 Israel TV broadcast that showed soldiers applying lipstick and mascara.

"You enter an image that is not yours. You have to improvise, you have to know how to walk, how to talk and all those little things that are suddenly not natural," one soldier in drag said at the time.

The Amherst Survival Center, which provides clothes to the needy, was helped to to move everything in its basement location across the street.

An Amherst resident selling at the Farmer's Market in town said the organizers of the project "should have done it 25 years ago."

Another resident, who said he was originally from New York, agreed and added that he thought Amherst was "nice enough," because of resident's and student's responsible attitude, caused for the most part by the small size of the town, which makes people conscious about their actions, and stores to care about their community.

The day ended festively with free pizza provided by the local shops, live music and a "thanks to all of you" from University of Massachusetts President Michael Hooker.

Weird Halloween spooks Curtain crowd

Seventy Scenes of Halloween
Curtain Theater
April 28, 1993

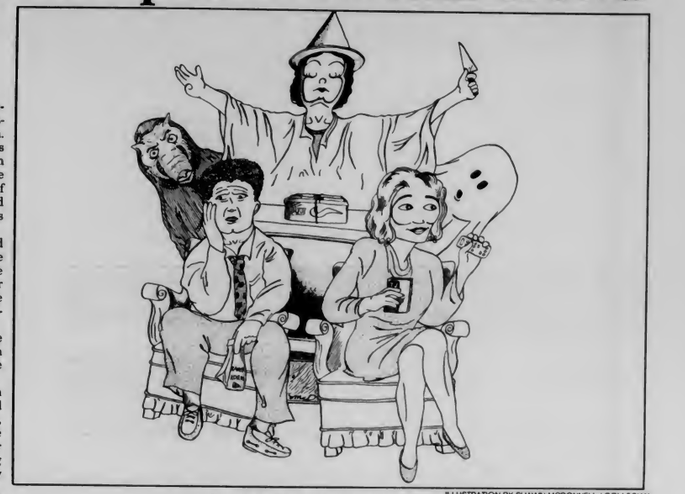

ILLUSTRATION BY SHAWN MCDONNELL / COLLEGIAN

The cast of Seventy Scenes of Halloween and "friends."

There is something hugely entertaining about Seventy Scenes of Halloween, the new Theatre Department production which opened Wednesday in the Curtain.

Perhaps it is the knowledge that scores of theatre pros like director Sabrina Hamilton and stars Lynda Newton and Edgar McIntosh have labored for months to create something which could not accurately be accused of making rational sense. Perhaps it is just that in a world of sitcom banality and weary self-control, rationality is overrated.

Halloween is the story of Joan and Jeff (Newton and McIntosh); tired, boring yuppies who sit in their sparse showroom apartment with approximately the same amount of stimulation as the two goldfish that sit in their sparse, boring fishtank. They are vain, beautiful people whose quiet Halloween night-at-home involves semi-formal dress and separate chairs.

As played by Newton and McIntosh, Joan and Jeff are ghouls in their own right — mirthlessly shunning both the holiday festivities and each other. But when the beasts arrive, everything starts looking up.

Written by dramatist Jeffrey Jones, Halloween is an unusual play, combining elements of absurdity and farce into the funniest evening of theatre this semester, if not this year. Arranged into seventy short scenes (the longest runs about three minutes), the play pits our chronically dull duo against leering wolves, cackling witches and hungry ghosts in an increasingly unlikely series of events.

McIntosh guides a gamey chicken in dance, he and Newton pass around a mysterious cardboard box (which reappears with insane regularity), and two wolves in red plastic ponchos and yellow rubber gloves perform a pantless male bonding dance.

All of this comic business is twice as funny as it should be: you laugh at the play for being so ridiculous, and you laugh at yourself for laughing in the first place. If there is no logical connection between one scene and another, it hardly matters — the audience doesn't stop chuckling long enough to worry about plot.

Those on a quest for substance may find themselves disappointed, but that is not to say that the production defies reason.

Both the direction and the text of the play seem to suggest deeper meanings to its insanity — a meaning which is found not in coherent plot, but in a series of suggestions about Joan and Jeff's relationship.

The skeletons in their closet (if you count that as a pun, it's yours, not mine) are symbols of past relationships and present infidelities which the couple tries to ignore. There is even an atypically serious scene in which McIntosh reminisces about an old love, while Michelle C.T. Hendrick gazes at him from the opposite side of a window.

This is all interesting enough for someone writing a paper, but the real fun of Halloween lies in those moments when the play defies meaning, such as when Newton opens the freezer door and discovers. . . well, you'll have to see for yourself.

Sabrina Hamilton has staged the play with energy and wit, and is given sterling support by her cast and designers. John McDermott's set design is simple but expressive, with such touches of yuppie style as a chintzy bust of Mozart and a statue of an elephant riding a bike. Lighting designer Matthew Richards casts shadows of vines and cobwebs across the stage, and Lori Dawson's sound effects give the proceedings the deliciously overwrought feeling of a B-movie.

Among an outstanding ensemble (which also includes Michelle C.T. Hendrick and Star Barry as the beasts), Newton and McIntosh shine. Both perform with great energy and spirit, and it is wonderful to watch their essentially dislikable characters.

If you're a linear thinker you'd better stay home. But anyone looking for pure entertainment can't do any better than this show.

"Seventy Scenes of Halloween" can be still be seen May 4-8 at 8 p.m. in the Curtain Theatre. Tickets may be purchased at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Flirtations update the classic sounds of the '50s

Singing quartet introduces new themes to some traditional tunes at the SUB

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

The Flirtations
Student Union Ballroom
May 2, 1993

Fresh from dates on "The Arsenio Hall Show," "The Tonight Show" and most importantly, the recent gay, lesbian and bisexual march on Washington D.C., The Flirtations wowed an appreciative audience Sunday with their passionate and funny songs about love and gay life.

Roaring on stage to rousing applause, the four-member singing group made up of crooners Cliff Townsend, Jimmy Rutland, Aurelio Font and Jon Areton, opened with a clever doo-wop ditty that immediately showcased their intricate harmonies and stellar voices.

With tongue firmly implanted in cheek, the Flirtations grooved into "Twistin'," a fun tune that wouldn't seem out of place at a '50s sock hop were it not for lines like, "even the straights are feelin' gay."

Smoothing into a seamless rendition of "Mr. Sandman," the Flirtations nearly put the Andrews sisters to shame. Next up was a soulful version of "Time After Time." The Flirts infused this Cindy Lauper hit with a kind of simple yet layered emotion.

The Flirts closed the first set with an altered version of Madonna's "Hanky Panky," leaving the phrase "nothin' like a good spanky" firmly entrenched in Flirtations lore and "Dolores," a Puerto Rican song about lesbian love that had the audience singing and clapping as the group left for intermission.

The group returned to the stage with a hilarious medley of Beach Boys tunes reworked into a coming out song. After, the group performed a skit called "One of Us," where each member would tell something about one of the group; a dialogue also known by diehard Flirtations fans as "Flirtdirt." The funniest comment came when one said that he had a sex dream about Bill Clinton.

"After he left town for the march, I just fantasized about Stephanopoulos," he said, referring to the twentysomething Clinton administration press secretary.

The concert took a serious turn when the group discussed Michael Callen, the absent fifth Flirt, who is battling Karposi's Sarcoma and too ill to tour. In recognition, the group sang a stunning version of "Living in Wartime," a rallying call about living in the war zone of AIDS, written by Callen himself.

The group followed up with a haunting cover of "Stand by Me," with member Cliff Townsend's booming voice filling the SUB. Fellow Flirt Jimmy Rutland told about his life growing up in small-town Georgia and punctuated it with the ultimate high school revenge song, "Homecoming Queen Has Got a Gun." Despite the fact that the microphone kept falling on the stand ("in case my crotch has anything to say," he quipped), Rutland's razor sharp delivery made the number the comic high point.

Arguably the group's signature song, The Flirtations then performed a sweet, hopeful lullaby called "Everything Is Possible." With its gentle swing, the song aptly describes what the group is all about: you can do any thing you want to do.

The Flirts closed the show with "Something Inside So Strong," a marvelously empowering South African song of freedom. The audience joined in with claps and voices, setting the ballroom ablaze with spirit.

Two standing ovations led the group back on stage for dual encores, proving that you can't have too much of a good thing. Afterwards, the Flirts signed autographs and greeted the audience, as down to earth in person as they seemed on stage. With their wide range of voices and songs, The Flirtations turned in a truly funny and moving evening of entertainment.

Emily rediscovers meaning of freedom

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Staff

Ever since I can remember, my father has had the same group of die-hard childhood friends. Through the years, stories of wild Friday nights at the track or at the drive-in (with at least three guys hidden in the trunk) have been told around the dining room tables of these grown men, still mentally 21 years old.

I have always marvelled at the strong ties between my father and his cronies, and at the fact that most are immigrants, like my dad, who have claimed their pieces of "Americana" over time but never forgotten each other or where they came from.

Emily
MARINO

I found myself thinking of my father in a train to Popoli, a tiny mountain town in the Italian region of Abruzzo where he was born and lived with my grandparents until his early teens before coming to America.

From the moment I stepped off of the train (and practically into my aunt's arms) I was welcomed and accepted as part of the family. Somehow I felt as though I had known these people for years and that I was returning home after perhaps a two-week absence.

The list of relatives that I met within nine days goes on for miles. The vacation seems like a whirlwind of tearful introductions and warm embraces, authentic home-cooked meals, stories of my grandparents' courting and tales of my father as a mischievous, out-spoken child.

Strolls around this sunny, peaceful town where everyone knows each other and the streets are filled with handshakes, kisses and enthusiastic "ciao's" revealed an easy-going, happy-go-lucky atmosphere.

The Popolese don't seem to need all that much in terms of material goods, knowing that the kindness, generosity and sincere best wishes of the same loyal, stable friends and family will never let them be lacking.

Knowing that this kind of safe, happy tranquil life exists brings with it a kind of success at the thought of what could have been in my own life had my grandparents remained in Italy.

Yet while it seems that everything one would ever want and need is at one's fingertips in Popoli, this satiety is stagnant because it does not allow for change or for challenge.

I have the knowledge that home, while not always sunny, means freedom. For I have the freedom to come and go, to explore what is out there and know that I will always have a place to return to.

While each man holds onto memories, traditions and relationships from his past, he does so in America; a land which allows him to choose his path and know that in the end, home is where the heart is.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Meditation will help you become a dynamic and positive thinker. Polish your leadership skills. Aiding the disadvantaged will pave the way to new fulfillment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Pay more attention to insurance matters and tax payments. A business deal prospers. Postpone travel until you can see more people. Romance goes on the back burner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Returning favors will win you respect. Enticing career and business opportunities attract your attention. Working at a deliberate pace helps you avoid costly mistakes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A surprising move by another person puts you in a unique position. In time, you will find the right solution. Budget your energies and money more carefully.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Originality and independence net you new business — perhaps even a promotion. By being candid with higher-ups, you gain a sympathetic ear. Keep spending and eating under moderation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You reap new rewards from past efforts. Continued striving for better methods and improved tactics will bring additional gains. Give your wholehearted support to loved ones in need.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It is imperative that you think and function competently right from the start today. Otherwise, you could wind up in the red on your balance sheet. Find more time for exercise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It is imperative that you think and function completely right from the start today. Otherwise, you could wind up in the red on you balance sheet. Move enjoyable pursuits materialize in the evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An excellent time to shake hands and sign on the dotted line. To keep your energy high, eat right; do not try to run hard all day on "empty." Enjoy an evening at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get back into shape on a physical and mental level. Group sports and vigorous exercise can be therapeutic. Be more outspoken when defending your principles.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Wonderful opportunities call you today. Use the phone and a partnership will blossom. At both business meetings and social gatherings, you will shine.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Get organized in the home front. Stock up on groceries and consider a new decorating scheme. Nurturing improves a parent child relationship.

three steals.

For the Blazers to knock off San Antonio, they must have their superstar.

Ron Harper of the Los Angeles Clippers. Harper roared back from a knee injury in Game 2 against the Rockets with a vengeance, scoring 29 points in retaliation to Bill Walton's statement that the Paper Clips were "stuck in mediocrity".

"Once I saw the halftime piece with Walton, it ticked me off," said Harper. "After I heard what he said, I knew I was going to play through the pain."

Wow, what a shock? Someone else disliking Bill Walton.

Kevin McHale of the Boston Celtics. Ever since he appeared on Cheers, McHale has been one of my favorites. It is tough for me to say that, considering I loathe almost anything that has to do with the Celtics. But, McHale was in vintage form Saturday as he scored 30 points and grabbed 10 boards by dominating one of the future's best, Larry Johnson.

With everything that went on with the C's this past weekend, McHale's performance almost overshadowed the loss of Reggie Lewis.

Did you see that?

• Charlotte winning the first playoff game for any of the four expansion teams.

• Shaquille O'Neal and his Pepsi/Reebok commercial. Talk about a joint venture, and it doesn't have anything to do with the Chief.

• That kid Gino who calls himself the best-looking man on campus. Yeah, right — he's afraid to even stick a jump shot at the Horseshoe.

• Dominique and his 13-for-31 shooting from the floor against the Bulls in Game 2.

• David "I'm not the Chancellor yet" Scott and his job on the public address system at both the lacrosse and baseball games. Only thing better than a Dave Scott "Now batting, Nelson Uuuubaaaaldo!" is a Mike Fagerson "Saaave, LoPresti!"

• An event at Mullins Center since the A-10 basketball championship. That's funny, neither have I.

pin down what the problem is and get him well."

He said he was surprised Lewis, who collapsed during a game last Thursday night, left New England Baptist, the Celtics' primary hospital for examination and treatment of players.

"The Celtics are very concerned about Reggie. There was a lot of concern about him leaving here," said Rattray, who had said Sunday that Lewis would not play again this season. He did not say if Lewis' condition was career-threatening.

Lewis left New England Baptist with his wife, an unidentified friend and a representative of Brigham and Women's, Rattray said. The Globe identified him as George Kaye, the vice president of human resources.

"That was probably the most fun I've ever had in my career, the two years in Japan," he said. "Not to discount the pennant races or anything, but seeing a foreign country and living over there was something else."

Laga came home to the United States in 1992 and this spring decided to give the major leagues one last shot, this time with the Atlanta Braves in spring training. After getting cut from the Braves, Laga returned to the Pioneer Valley.

"I met [Laga] from a mutual friend, who hooked us up, and he had been working as a volunteer coach over the winter," said UMass head coach Mike Stone. "He went to Atlanta with the understanding that if things didn't work out, he'd be back to help us out.

"He's a good guy, he's been helping our hitters out, working with the first basemen and the outfielders. He keeps everybody jovial."

Laga hit over 175 minor league homers, but only a handful in the big leagues. Still, a man who did most of his damage in the bush leagues is anything but that to the Minutemen he now instructs.

"Mike's a pro, he's very professional about the way he conducts business," said UMass right-hander Jeff Toothaker. "He's helped us out just with his presence."

In moving to the Amherst area with his wife Robyn and family, Laga had hoped to finish off a degree in sport management at UMass. Playing ball now will take a backseat to coaching and studying, as Laga said he will start school next year and be back to help out as a coach for the Minutemen.

"The thing I like most about this team is that they keep fighting back. They're not quitters," said Laga. "If they're down 10 runs, they're still trying. That helps everyone, the pitchers, the hitters, to know that they're not gonna give up."

Minutewomen no-hit, swept by UConn

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts continued its struggles against the University of Connecticut yesterday, dropping both ends of a doubleheader to the Huskies, 1-0 and 2-1.

The losses leave the Minutewomen with an 0-5 record for the season against UConn. The run scored by the Minutewomen in the second game was also the first run they had been able to score against UConn in those five contests.

Finally, to make matters worse, UConn starter Pat Conlan threw a no-hitter at the Minutewomen in the first game, running her season record against UMass to 3-0.

The Huskies got their only run of the ball game in the first inning off tough-luck loser Kelly Daut when lead-off hitter Janna Venice singled, stole second, was sacrificed over to third, and scored on a single to center by Husky left fielder Andrea D'Innocenzo.

Every time that UMass threatened to score (Conlan walked three batters), either the UConn pitching or defense slammed the door in the faces of the Minutewomen.

Case in point was the fourth inning when UMass had runners at first and second thanks to walks to shortstop Amy Powell and first baseman Rachel Lawson. Conlan squashed the rally by fanning right fielder Jenn Salisbury.

The Minutewomen also threatened in the fifth when center fielder Heather Dorsey led off with a walk and advanced to third behind a sacrifice bunt and a fielder's choice. Conlan then struck out second baseman Tracey DuEst to end the inning and also the next six Minutewomen to end the contest.

Daut (10-11) went the distance, giving up the one run on three hits. She struck out three and walked none.

A lineup change in the second game by head coach Elaine Sortino ended the goose egg parade by the Husky pitchers against the UMass offense. Sortino flip-flopped the top two spots in the lineup by making Powell the leadoff batter and dropping left fielder Stacey Nichols down one spot to second.

The move paid off as Powell led off the home half of the first with a triple to right and scored on a Nichols sacrifice fly to deep left field.

The lead held up until the sixth when things unraveled for the Minutewomen and starting pitcher Darlene Claffey. UConn catcher Khristen Andrade led off with a single, but was wiped out on a fielder's choice by Venice. Venice then stole second and advanced to third on a single to left by second baseman Shari Blackman.

A single by D'Innocenzo chased Venice home, leaving runners at first and second with one out. After another fielder's choice, third baseman Chris Woodman singled to center, but Dorsey got a good jump on the ball, preventing a Husky run, but leaving the bases loaded.

Minutewomen third baseman Laurie Dondarski came up with another one of her spectacular defensive efforts when she dove to her left to stab a screamer off the bat of UConn right fielder Kim Staehle, but her lunging effort to tag out the runner heading to third came up empty and the Huskies scored the go-ahead run.

Claffey, who was named the Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week yesterday, worked all seven innings, allowing two runs on seven hits while striking out one and hitting a batter. Her record falls to 11-7.

Ex-major leaguer Laga a hit in UMass dugout

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN
The UMass baseball team, who won two of three against the University of Rhode Island over the weekend, host Northeastern today at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field.

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

If experience is the wealth of life, University of Massachusetts volunteer baseball assistant Mike Laga must be a rich man.

When the Minutemen (16-18) host Northeastern University (10-16) at 3 p.m. today, they will have the services of the seasoned ex-major leaguer Laga in the dugout.

Mike Laga, volunteer assistant for UMass baseball, used to be Mike Laga, rising star, a member of both the 1984 World Series champion Detroit Tigers and 1987 National League champion St. Louis Cardinals. Laga has played everywhere from Evansville, Ind. to Louisville, Ky., all the way to Japan, and almost everywhere in between.

The 32-year-old Laga was known as a power hitter, and with his talent there was once great promise. Take the home run he hit off Hall of Famer Jim Palmer for instance, the one that bounced off the facing of the third deck of Tiger Stadium . . .

. . . Or the club record 34 HR he hit in 444 appearances at Evansville in 1982, which averages out to a dinger every 13 at bats. Throw in his first hit as a Cardinal in Busch Stadium, a two-run blast, and his first major league HR — a mere three days into his career.

"Mike Laga will make you forget about Mickey Mantle," Tigers manager Sparky Anderson once said. Allowing Anderson his customary exaggeration, Laga was the 17th pick overall in the 1980 January draft, and for a time, it looked like he would be a superstar. It never happened.

"Sparky would say stuff like that that would make it tough on a guy coming up," Laga said. "He was afraid to play young guys I think, and that made it tougher."

From 1980, when Laga first came up, to 1986, when the Cardinals traded for him mid-season, he played for the black and white of Detroit. In 1987, through 1990, he switched to the National League, with St. Louis and the San Francisco Giants before heading overseas to Japan in 1991 and 1992.

"Whitey Herzog [of the Cardinals], of the three managers in the States I've played for, was probably my favorite," Laga said. "He was a super person, and one of the smartest managers in the game."

Laga's career flourished with the two years in Japan, and he said it was an experience of a lifetime.

Stars shine in NBA playoff action

"If we're going to die, we're going to die fighting."
— Derrick Coleman.

Because the end of spring semester is approaching fast, this column will probably only appear once more. For the rest of the semester, this space is dedicated to Reggie Lewis. Let's all pray for his safe and healthy return. Here are the Shining Stars of the Playoffs, on a bagel:

NOTES FROM THE HARDWOOD
by Art Stapleton

Derrick Coleman of the New Jersey Nets. One of the most talented players finally used the spotlight to shine. Coleman carried the Nets to an upset of the Cavs, 101-99 at Richfield Coliseum, by playing all 48 minutes, scoring 27 points, collecting 14 rebounds, and dishing out four assists.

DC needs to let his team ride his back if the Nets even have a shot to hold home-court advantage.

Sedale Threatt of the LA Lakers. This guard single-handedly beat Phoenix in Game 1, scoring 35 points en route to the biggest upset so far. Everyone doubted the Lakers' replacement for Magic.

Hey, even I doubted the threat of Threatt. But, after leading the Fakers to a 39-43 regular-season record, this floor general paired with Byron Scott on the way to a two-game lead.

Malik Sealy of the Indiana Pacers. Sealy somehow left the Pacers' playbook in an airport near New York City, and it ended up in the hands of WFAN's morning DJ Don Imus, who promptly read it over the air of the radio station with the largest listening audience. Wasn't it a coincidence that WFAN is the flagship station of the Knickerbockers?

Maybe it was a false playbook?

Hmmm . . . a playbook ending up in the hands of the opposition. Sounds like that episode of the Brady Bunch when Marcia's boyfriend, Jerry Rogers, stole Greg's playbook for the big football game.

Yes, I did watch too much television when I was younger.

John Starks of the New York Knicks. No matter how much I hammer Mr. Cheap Shot, I have to give credit where credit is due. With Patrick Ewing on the bench with foul trouble, Starks led the New York comeback with 12 of his playoff-high 29 points in the fourth quarter.

Starks also split time at the point and gathered 11 assists. However, I would just like to add that if Kenny Anderson was in the playoffs, he would be even more impressive. Enough said.

Clyde Drexler of the Trail Blazers. Drexler returned and sparked a victory for Portland, tying the series at 1-1. After missing eleven out of the last 12 games in the regular season and Game 1, Clyde the Glide had 21 points, five rebounds, five assists, and

Celts' Lewis moves to new area hospital

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Reggie Lewis, his season over and his career hanging in the balance, switched hospitals against the Boston Celtics' wishes after being diagnosed with heart problems.

Tests begun Monday at Brigham and Women's Hospital "will continue over the next several days. Lewis is comfortable, in stable condition and in good spirits," Peter Roisman, his agent, said in a prepared statement.

The Celtics captain and leading scorer left New England Baptist Hospital at about 11:30 p.m. Sunday. Tests there had uncovered "cardiac abnormalities" Jim Rattray, a spokesman for the hospital, said Sunday.

Calls to Lewis at Brigham and Women's were not forwarded.

"I'm just leaving to get some fresh air," Lewis said as he was leaving New England Baptist, the Boston Globe reported. "The treatment's great. The treatment's just tremendous."

Celtics senior executive vice president Dave Gavitt, who spoke with Lewis by telephone shortly before Lewis left New England Baptist, said, "the big thing is to really

Deadly fire devastates Muslim town

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press

SARAJEVO — Bosnian Serbs backed by artillery and armored units set the Muslim town of Zepa ablaze Tuesday. Bosnia's Muslim leadership said up to 100 people were believed killed or wounded.

The attack came a day before the Bosnian Serb assembly reconsiders a U.N. peace plan that it rejected earlier to the consternation of the international community and its Serbian backers in Yugoslavia.

The Bosnian government appealed for U.N. soldiers to protect the 40,000 people who have sought protection in Zepa from advancing Serbian rebels.

Zepa has swollen nearly five times in size since the Bosnian war broke out in April 1992.

Bosnia's envoy at the United Nations in New York, Mohammed Sacirbey, said his Foreign Ministry had intercepted orders from a local Bosnian Serb commander "to burn down Zepa, to kill all alive, and regardless of losses, take over Zepa."

He cited a letter from Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic to the U.N. Security Council for the casualty figure in Zepa estimating dozens, probably as many as 100, dead and injured.

Zepa "is burning. It has been attacked by artillery," said Zeljko Grubesik, a staff member of the Bosnian army operations center.

The Bosnian Foreign Ministry quoted an unidentified Serb commander as saying: "The infantry must break through into Zepa. This must be completed before [U.N. peacekeepers] arrive and the world public hears about it."

The Security Council convened Tuesday afternoon to hear form Cyrus Vance, the former U.S. secretary of state who along with Lord Owen of Britain devised the peace plan for Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Council members who recently returned to Bosnia have proposed setting up safe havens.

There was no report of an assault on Zepa from Bosnian Serb rebels.

The Foreign Ministry appealed for help to the United Nations and the United States.

President Clinton has threatened Bosnian Serb rebels with military air strikes on Serbian artillery positions unless the fighting ceases in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The Chancellor's Task Force for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Matters met yesterday to listen to testimony and gather information in order to make recommendations to the administration.

Chaired by Professor Pat Griffin, from the School of Education, the task force is representative of all aspects of campus life.

Griffin read a statement from Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Thomas Robinson saying that he "publicly affirms his intention to make the campus a place where GLB students, faculty and staff live comfortably."

Robinson also said he supports the recommendations and will work to see them implemented.

Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin said she hopes people will look to the office with their concerns. She said she expressed her personal commitment to the issues and needs of the community.

Junior history major Matt Malone, a member of the task force, said he had experienced and could appreciate the agony of the coming-out process.

"We want to be in the business of creating spaces and atmospheres, but so much of that is reactive and crisis-oriented," Malone said. "It's like living in one giant dysfunctional family."

Malone said he believes it is important to reach GLB people of color. He said he believes they are "virtually invisible."

Deven DeMarco, a freshman communications major, said the "Two in Twenty" floor should be advertised to all incoming freshman. He also said he would like to see more courses involving GLB studies.

"The word diversity is used and not really applied," DeMarco said.

Senate to allocate money from student trust fund

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

Approximately $1.8 million from the Students Activities Trust Fund was proposed on Monday by the Undergraduate Student Senate's Budget Committee to be allocated to over 50 University Registered Student Organizations, agencies and businesses.

The proposal, which is to be voted on by the Senate tonight, is the product of nine months of budgetary scrutiny, scores of meetings with student organizations and many late nights. Emily Rose, Budget Committee chairperson, said this will allow for more funding for RSOs.

"I think the RSOs will be satisfied. Most students on this campus aren't aware of what the trust fund is," Rose said. "But every single student is affected by student activities."

It was difficult in working on the budget process, Rose said. The cost of living for paid professionals increased by 13 percent, along with the graduate stipend. The Committee also tried to get an increase of $4.50 over the last academic year.

"We had to take all those things we had into account, that we normally didn't have to," Rose said. "With all the increases, it was surprising we could get money for RSOs."

While the Budget Committee was working on the budget, they wondered if the separation from the Student Activities Office from the Trust Fund, would be approved by the Board of Trustees. Because paid professionals working in the Student Activities Office would now be paid by the curriculum fee, their benefits would now be paid by the state. Many of the paid staff, who were moved, are advisors to RSOs and accounts payables.

"Out of the entire University, the SATF is one of the most complex and diverse funds, and students are responsible for it," Rose said. "It's really a challenge on our part."

The undergraduate students activities fee, which will be $84 for the next academic year, funds the trust fund.

The PVTA, Off-Campus Student Housing, ethnic organizations and sports clubs are just a few things the trust fund supports, Rose said.

The annual Spring Concert, an event widely-attended by students, is funded by a flat-fee of $50,000 drawn from the trust

HOT, SEXY, AND SAFER TOUR COMES TO UMASS

Suzi Landolphi, a comedienne with a message, will bring her provocative, outrageous performance Hot, Sexy, and Safer to UMass on May 13. Landolphi will offer two shows at 7 and 9 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Landolphi's performances aim at encouraging people to accept and negotiate safer sex practices, raising consciousness regarding HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases and educating for the prevention of these diseases.

Landolphi has been nominated for the Harry Chapin Humanitarian Award and as "Lecturer of the Year" by the National Association of Campus Activities.

She also hosts her own weekly TV show for teenagers called Raparound on WBZ in Boston and was Celebrity Spokesperson for the First National Children with HIV/AIDS Awareness Day in June 1991 in Washington D.C.

Her performances will by filmed by Jonathan Stack, the producer of the documentary film "Damned in the USA," and will be used for an educational documentary to be shown on various national television stations.

The program is sponsored by the Commuter Area Government, the UMass Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns, AHORA, the Office of Greek Affairs, the Office of Third World Affairs, the Office of Human Relations, the Bilingual Collegiate Program, CCEMBS and the UMass Health Education Project.

DISTINGUISHED TEACHING AWARDS

Vice Chancellor for Research and Dean of the Graduate School Samuel F. Conti recently announced the winner of the Distinguished Teacher Awards and the 1993 Faculty Fellowship Awards.

Three UMass professors won Distinguished Teacher Awards. They are Professor Roberts W. French of the English Department; Professor Karen K. List of the journalism department; and T. Michael Peters of the entomology department.

Three students also received Distinguished Teaching Awards: Marissa M. Damon, classics; Amy M. Lee, English and Writing Program; and Patricia A. Mangan, anthropology department.

Faculty Fellowship awards were given to Computer Science Professor Lori A. Clarke, English Professor Peter Elbow, Linguistics Professor Lyn Frazier, Physics and Astronomy Robert B. Hallock and Education Professor Allen E. Ivey.

PROFESSOR NAMED GUGGENHEIM FELLOW

University of Massachusetts Professor Emeritus of Soil Physics Daniel Hillel has recieved a Guggenheim Fellowship worth $28,000 to aid the completion of a book on possible solutions to the water shortage in the Middle East.

Hillel will travel to Israel, Egypt, Jordan and Turkey this summer for his book, The Rivers of Eden: Water for Peace in the Middle East, which is scheduled for publication by Oxford University Press in early 1994.

Hillel's area of research centers on hydrology — water supply, water quality and water-use efficiency. He said he believes policy makers and politicians are often unaware of the technical options for solving water resource problems.

In the Middle East, Hillel said, nations must develop water resources cooperatively because they run across national boundaries so no one country can do it alone without conflict with its neighbors.

"I want to show that the water issue on its own merits can be a reason for peace in the region," Hillel said. "Technical people — hydrologists, agronomists, engineers, water conservationists — can come together and deal with the problem, because they share a common language and are less polemical than politicians. Technical people deal with facts and are dedicated to solving problems in a practical way."

30 seniors receive awards for academic excellence

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

More than 350 students, parents and faculty attended the University of Massachusetts Honors Program's awards banquet on Saturday evening in the Campus Center Auditorium. University President Michael Hooker was the main speaker at the event.

Thirty awards were given to University seniors. Some students had to apply for the awards by writing an essay and getting recommendations from teachers. Meredith Lind, the assistant to the director of the Honors Program, said the selection committee got an overwhelming amount of applicants.

"We had almost 40 applicants for the 10 Director's Awards," Lind said. "All of [the applicants] were really outstanding."

Adrienne Fleming received the Robert G. Cooke Award with $250 by Dr. Annaliese Bischoff, the associate director of the Honors Program. The award is in memory of Robert Cooke, who was from the class of 1925.

Fleming distributed food to the homeless and worked to improve conditions in a primary school in Ireland, in addition to volunteering at a center for abused women in the United States. She also arranged speakers for the April 1990 Take Back the Night march. And despite all her activities, Lind said Fleming has three children and is planning to graduate from the nursing program with summa cumulate.

"She has years of working as a volunteer," Lind said.

Chris A. Flood and Kimberley L. Rayner received the Class of 1941 Humanitarian Awards with $1,040 for academic excellence and community service. The Honors newsletter, High Points, will publish their essays.

History Department Chair Dr. Robert Jones presented Jason George, a senior history major, with the Howard H. Quint Memorial Prize in Honors with $300 for outstanding scholarship. Quint founded the Honors Program and was a University history professor.

Honors Director Linda Nolan gave 10 students the Honors Director's Award with $500 for excellent Honors theses. Kerri L. Beal, microbiology; Amy Feinstein, poetry; Joshua R. Gold, comparative literature; Rebecca A. Johnson, chemistry; Elizabeth A. Long, finance; Kelly A. Michaelian, psychology; James H. Smith, interdisciplinary in anthropology and social thought and political economy; Wiley J. Smith, psychology/neuroscience; Scott L. Whitmore, economics; and Susan E. Ziegler, environmental science, received the Director's Award.

"Probably one of the most important attributes of the [Honors] Program is the mentoring relationship that evolves between the faculty and students through the process of entering into a project or thesis endeavor," Nolan said.

Students learn about recycling

By SUSAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Correspondent

It is necessary to continue educating students and disseminating information about recycling, according to the Coordinator of the Housing Services Recycling Program.

When the University's recycling program started, the program had only two months to put 41 residence halls on line, Roger Guzowski said. Amherst had just enacted a law, requiring UMass to recycle 25 percent of its waste.

Because of the forced implementation of the recycling program, Guzowski said students were not as fully aware about recycling issues as he would have liked.

"With such a rush, students weren't as educated about recycling as we would have liked them to be," Guzowski said. "Today, a lot of students are still adjusting to dormitory recycling because their hometown recycling programs are different or, in many cases, students have never recycled before coming to UMass."

The program distributes recycling packets and sells recycled products each semester on the Campus Center Concourse and in the dormitories, Guzowski said. The program also holds recycling information sessions in residence halls at the resident assistants' request. Education about recycling has been somewhat effective, but that more work has to be done, Guzowski said.

"The education has been effective to an extent, but some of the recycling problems in the dorms occurred first with the blue recycling containers themselves and then with the red recycling bins where students deposit their glass, plastic, metal and newspaper," Guzowski said.

"We discovered that when we first issued the blue bins for students' dorm rooms a lot of students weren't utilizing them for recycling but instead for end tables, laundry baskets and storage."

To make sure students are using the bins for recycling, the Recycling Program will be reordering bins, that are changed to less "useful" shapes, such as small garbage cans, Guzowski said.

Counselor to discuss Latina sterilization

By STACY MALONE
Collegian Staff

Is the over-population of Puerto Rico economically bad for Puerto Rico and the United States? Is the solution the sterilization of Latina women?

Luz Pina-Till, the director of counseling and testing program for HIV at the Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts, will speak on the topic of "Reproductive Issues of Latina Women" Thursday in Campus Center Room 174-176 at 7 p.m.

"Luz Pina-Till goes into the Latina community to educate women of color on their reproductive options," Marisol Rosario, a coordinator of the event said. "She educates women of their reproduction options as a whole and informs them where reproductive services are available for low income women."

Rosario said she is one of four students coordinating the event as a project for the class "Struggles of Indigenous Women" taught by Professor Almeita in the Women's Studies department.

"I chose this topic, because as a Latina women it was always an issue of concern to me and I wanted more education on the issue of reproductive health for women of color and specifically for Latina women," Rosario said. "I want to bring out that abuses do occur and they can be addressed rather than ignored."

Rosario said the discussion will open with the showing of "La Operacion (The Operation)," a film which focuses on the sterilization of women, the effects and various measures of population control in Puerto Rico taken by the United States in the past. Following will be Pina-Till's presentation on the issues of Latinas concerning their health and reproduction in the United States.

The event is sponsored by the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center, the American Indian Association, SGA Finance Committee, OTWA and AHORA and admission is free.

A whisper to a scream

There was this short swing-out door behind the register that made this awful high-pitched squeak every time you opened it. So one day I decided to get to three in one oil from the drug store shelf and oil the hinges.

"Hey, how'd you fix that door? That's annoyed me for months."

I grew up in a little town in western Massachusetts which is the home of the now weed-overgrown Congamond lakes as well as a national Motocross track. Every year we hold a firemen's carnival where you can buy a hot dog and throw rings around the necks of glass bottles. We recently had a McDonald's built, which has taken over the position of Nightly Hangout Place from the Summer House restaurant at which I happen to work, cooking hamburgers and scooping ice cream for people with wild senses of humor.

Nathan
CRICK

"Hot enough for ya?"

No, it isn't. If it were, all you people would stay home and we could sit on the counter and drink free soda all day instead of having to answer to comedians like yourself.

But, alas, comedians abound. One of my friends who works there took the trash out back after closing one night, and the echo of "Hey dork!" came from a group of regulars sitting on top of their cars in the parking lot. Needless to say it was a blow to his self respect.

This was pre-McDonalds, of course. Now those voices of our generation spend their time trying to defend their new restaurant base from the invading hordes of kids from the next town over. They had planned a big "turf" battle there a couple times, but everyone kept showing up at the wrong time and eventually they all lost interest. Then the skaters moved in and the whole place just turned into a police state. Go figure. The place doesn't even sell pastries.

And now I'm going back. I kind of think of it as a pilgrimage now, like the American version of a trip to Mecca. You see, there is an atmosphere that pervades one's hometown, and it has this voice that whispers in the back of your mind, and sometimes shouts at you while you are emptying trash after work. It is old and tired and holds the dying wisdom of the thousands who have come and gone in its boundaries.

I started hearing it when I was in high school. It murmured to me when one of my best friends in 7th grade dropped out as a junior and moved in with a girl with two children. It talked to me when I cursed at my basketball coach whose name still hung in the gym after his glory years. It screamed to me when I saw the men in the Camaros pull up every day to pick up the freshmen girls after school.

"Get the hell out of here!"

Voices can be subtle that way.

Unfortunately, though, the voices can do nothing about the present. You are stuck in the sometimes deadening experience of being home, where it seems a constant battle against becoming routine. Against symptoms like watching A Current Affair, and enjoying it. It is a struggle, and most of your comfort comes mainly in the fact that it is all temporary.

So you finally depart in the fall and return to the land of freedom and crazy fun we call college. And soon you might get to feeling strange, looking around and seeing Camaros around the corner and hearing jokes about the weather as you walk out of a restaurant. And it is then that the whispers come back. They make you look around at what you are doing here, and keep reminding you that there is a future waiting for you if you give it up. It's waiting with a spot open in the parking lot, hailing you with the mating call to entice you into oblivion.

I'm sick of the PC twerps

AAARRGGHHH!!! I have absolutely had it, patience has hit an all-time low. People are so absolutely stupid it numbs the mind. You might be wondering, "Does he mean anybody in particular?" And yes, yes, I most definitely do. Two groups or people, in fact.

The first is everybody's favorite sacred cow and/or target (depending upon which side of the political fence one sits), the Politically Correct. But before I begin my explanation/attack, I want to make one thing absolutely clear: I am, and have been for a very long time, a liberal. I believe with every fiber of my being in freedom and equality for every single living person on the planet. I virtually, maybe even violently (if necessary), oppose racism, sexism, homophobia, imperialism etc. Everyone should have equal access to everything, be it health care, freedom of speech, political office, whatever.

I agree with the essence of just about everything that is Politically Correct. Their goals match mine pretty well. But they still annoy me. The methods of the PC are, in a word or two, pathetic, futile and self-defeating. I don't know, maybe it's the feeling I get that a lot of these incredibly enlightened people just aren't sure what the hell they're talking about. I'm not saying anybody's faking it just because it's popular and cool to be PC, but they don't have very strong feeling about these issues, ideas and concepts when it comes right down to it.

Another aspect of these PC idiots that makes me nauseous is the attitude of moral superiority, as if you're automatically nowhere near as cool as them because you don't have your little Ally pin on. I'm taking Anthropology 106, and the basic thrust of the class seems to be if you're white, male and heterosexual, you are Guilty.

Which brings me to the other group of people I'm particularly disgusted with. There isn't really an easy label to use to identify them. I mean people like Farrakhan, Al Sharpton. . . now, the type of people I'm talking about will read this far and think, "Aha! He means minorities," or maybe "mouthy minorities," and call me a bigot. Wrong!

That's part of my point. I mean hypocrites. People who accuse all white people of being racist, but also claim only whites are racists. Huh? So, let me get this straight; if a black or Hispanic person assumes I'm racist, and treats me as less of a person because of it, that's not racism? Bull.

Yes, admittedly, whites have caused a lot of problems. But there's a couple of points to keep in mind. 1) White people are not wholly responsible for everything that has gone wrong in history. And 2) Even those things an individual or even large groups of whites are responsible for, not all whites are responsible for. Don't call me a racist. Don't expect me to feel guilty for discrimination. Yes, I do feel strongly about racism, yes I want to put an end to it, but blaming an entire race for the actions of a part of that race is not going to do it. I read something the other day in which, for roughly half a page of newspaper, white people were accused of being racist as a whole, blamed whites for everything, and at the end said, "Let us show you tolerance and multiculturalism."

Between the PC and whoever these people are, I almost wish I didn't have such liberal views. We've got a mixture of sniveling twerps going around saying, "Come on everybody, just be nice (or we'll whine really loud)," and a bunch of people blaming others for things they haven't personally done. Don't everybody think for a second that I mean all minorities think like this, or that all nouveau hippy types are mindless boobs. The trick is to deal with people as people. As if each and every person were separate from the others that look kind of like them, because they are. In the words of Big Black (two words synonymous with power), "Treat everybody with the respect that they deserve. No more, no less."

Assault letter is racially motivated

Fueled by my intense anger, I am writing about the anonymous letter by a white woman who was allegedly assaulted sexually by an African-American man [Collegian, April 29].

I did not witness the alleged incident, thus I cannot deny or acknowledge the event. I can, however, contribute my impressions of the letter. I do not believe a word written by this woman, for I am absolutely convinced that she is racially-motivated on her own part to act as an agent provacateur in an environment such as this one. Note that she made it crystal clear that "she was practically the only Caucasian woman in the crowd," and she was quick to point out that the assailant was an "African-American man."

I would like to ask this woman why on earth, out of all the sexual harassments and assaults she might have received in her lifetime from Euro-American men, she would bother to write about this incident so the entire racially-divided community could agonize over it. It was interesting to note that while this woman is cognizant that "a high percentage of rapes and sexual harassment on this campus are not even reported," she undoubtedly chose this alleged incident to demonstrate the pervasive malady.

There is something extraordinarily incomprehensible about a Euro-American woman who accuses a non-Euro-American man of sexual misconduct. Her mode of accusation was the prime choice of catalyst in initiating lynching of African-American men not so long ago. This is not to say I in any way condone sexual harassment or assaults.

One more thing to the anonymous white woman who submitted this letter: quit using African-American men as scapegoats for your racial superiority complex and repressed desires. I wish I could be a white woman like you so that after reading your article, I would have a more legitimate reason not to associate with all African-American men. This ought to bring you happiness.

Start a new dream

In the May 1993 issue of U. The National College Magazine, there is an article on the identity crisis of the the "generation X." It states that students are now so fragmented into subcultures that they have no rallying point to start a mass movement. One student even said that baby boomers had allowed the American dream to die for them because home payments had become impossible to make for unemployed college graduates.

Let it die so we can begin constructing ecocities of our most noble dreams! Students, your mission is to become the End Generation which stops the insanity and unhappiness of living in a sexist, racist and classist world! Without an end, there is no beginning. Without death, we cannot find the way to revitalize the generation of true love.

Vandalism infringes on rights of others

Early Saturday morning, around 3 a.m., a cranberry juice jug came crashing through our window into our house. It shattered two storm windows and a regular window, decapitated my pet mouse and covered our room with shards of glass. Yes, it was a typical weekend in Crestview Apartments.

We have the honor of living between UMass and Hobart Lane. Police told us they had broken up a party of about 400 people on Hobart earlier, and that it was likely one of those drunken party-goers threw the jar.

May I address a few issues here? My husband and I are full time UMass students, we are 21 and we both work. We also have two small children, which the person who threw the jar must have noticed, because he or she threw the jar through a "TOT" sticker the fire department put on the window. So beyond the stress of finals, money and children we had to deal with this senseless vandalism. Have you ever had to pull glass out a two-year-old's face? They tend to make a distinct, high-pitched scream as each shard of glass is pulled out — did you stay around to listen?

I realize part of college is having a good time with your friends and that the end of the semester is stressful and a time to party, but why must your good time infringe on the rights of others? Are you so selfish that you have no consideration for others? I'm filled with a deep sorrow every time I look at my child's face and realize that he was an innocent victim of your cruelty.

So whoever you are, I'd like to nominate you for jerk of the year. Thank you for making our stay at UMass so pleasant.

Guzowski said the red recycling bins on campus also caused a lot of problems.

"In the beginning of the program, a lot of students were throwing anything into these bins including condoms, watermelons, and other types of garbage," Guzowski said.

Mary Lyon Residence Hall in Northeast currently has the highest rate of recycling, with an average of 25 pounds of recyclables per student gathered each week. The average amount of weekly recyclables collected per student is 10-15 pounds, Guzowski said, noting that some of the large residential areas like Southwest and Sylvan have problems, because the buildings are not well-designed to accommodate the red recycling bins.

The University currently generates enough trash to fill 12 PVTA buses each day, and the University has reached its preliminary goal of recycling between 20 and 25 percent of its waste, Guzowski said.

GLB Task Force

Student's office, said the University's harassment policy in the Code of Student Conduct only covers undergraduates right now. He said all aspects of the University must come under the same understanding.

Members said they feel they have already achieved a number of accomplishments.

Members note that a GLB representative has been placed on the Multicultural Advisory Board. They have arranged monthly meetings of Student Activities subgroup with Robinson.

The task force has requested the Chancellor's office continue to financially support the brown bag lunches and guarantee the existence of the "Two in Twenty" GLB floor in Mary Lyons. They appropriated space to be allocated for a proposed GLB center.

They have also gathered information regarding GLB studies nationwide. In accordance with this, the task force is also trying to design courses primarily concerned with GLB studies that would carry a diversity designation. These courses could possibly be implemented into the education and psychology departments, according to task force members.

Griffin said the vision of the task force is to create a campus in which gay, lesbian and bisexual people feel safe and affirmed in all forms of campus life.

Senior BDIC major Ali Woolwich said she believes the campus is not the safe place everyone claims it is.

"Most people are scared to death, the only safe places are cloistered away," Woolwich said. "We're not making the grade."

Altman's sly Player premieres on HSCN

By EDWARD W. HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

There's something to whet everyone's appetites this week as HSCN comes fully loaded with a ballistic volley of cinematic treasures aimed at all the primal emotions.

The Accused — Jodie Foster ranks as one of Hollywood's most commanding actresses and this gutsy role as a rape survivor who goes to trial to see her attackers face justice, clearly outlines this fact, as Foster portrays an affecting and anguished performance that really grabs a hold of the viewer. Based upon the Big Dan rape trial that stemmed from a New Bedford, Mass. incident, director Jonathan Kaplan avoids the heavy-hitting sympathies and instead focuses on the ugly reality of the crime and the judicial system's adverse effect on the victim, thus imbedding a very powerful image on the viewer's mind, aided by intense performances by Foster and her lawyer, Kelly McGillis. They are two performances that highlight a movie you aren't likely to forget. A-

Angel Heart — Director Alan Parker's film is a strange lot, mixing crime noir and occult genres, that succeeds due to that director's capable handling of tricky material that could have become mired in the surreal. Mickey Rourke plays NYC detective Johnny Angel hired by the sinister Lou Cypher (Lou Cypher/Lucifer . . . could there be a connection?) played with low-key menace by a ballooned Robert DeNiro. This leads him down South, where ex-Cosby daughter Lisa Bonet figures into Angel's investigation and his private descent into hell. Parker keeps the plot movie and hurtles some mind-blowing twists, creating a thoroughly haunting film. B

Glory — Next to Ken Burns' master documentary series on the Civil War, this film creates one of the most indelible portrayals of that costly conflict to ever grace the screen. Edward Zwick directs the proceedings with meticulous care to detail in this story of the reality-steeped heroics of the Massachusetts Battalion manned by a regiment of courageous black soldiers. Denzel Washington received the Best Supporting Actor Oscar nod and deservedly so, although the entire cast earns great merit especially Morgan Freeman, Matthew Broderick and Cary Elwes. This is a dynamic representation of an important facet to the Great War that moves beyond history book rhetoric to truly establish a momentous period of American history. A-

House Party — Like a smarter, hip-hop version of Ferris Bueller's Day Off, this Warren and Reginald Hudling (Boomerang) film entertains due to spirited performances and a generous serving of laughs. Chirstopher Reid has the hapless role as Kid (also his Kid n' Play moniker), who early in the film becomes marked for death by the local toughs after a mishap in the high school cafeteria. But that's the least of his worries for his father (the late comic Robin Harris) stands in the way of Kid's destiny to attend the "jam to end all jams," the mythical house party. Some of the biggest laughs come in Hudlin's clever mockery of police mannerisms when encountering suburbia's racial divisions. Overall, a very fresh, entertaining comedy. B+

License to Drive — Oh such vast stomping material, so little space. Starring the two Coreys (jail bait Feldman and dork Haim), this is high concept, teenage-girl hormone stimuli and nothing more. The major fault you ask? Well, for starters the plot involving Haim's quest for a license to impress town beauty Heather Graham makes the most mediocre of "Growing Pains" episodes seem like high society. With this film and the abysmal Dream a Little Dream, I can see why Haim relegated himself to numerous Roger Corman Watchers flicks — staying virtually out of sight in Hollywood is a wise career move. Only for those who found Ernest Scared Stupid pure poetry. D-

The Player — This scathing indictment of the Hollywood film industry is perhaps the premier film of 1992 and boasts the greatest comeback of the year in Hollywood circles with the return of Robert Altman (*M*A*S*H*). How fitting that he should be so commended for a film that mocks even the most idle chatter in Hollywood. Though much ballyhooed for its impressive cast of cameos, its Altman's malicious hand for dark comedy that truly grabs the viewer, further enhanced by Tim Robbins virtuoso performance and Thoman Newman's haunting and celebratory crescendo pumping over the film's soundtrack. Screenwriter Michael Tolkin and Altman have a wise ear to the ground for Hollywood and amazingly cater the most obscure in-jokes to the audience's benefit. Both wickedly funny and shrewdly smart, this is a modern film masterpiece crafted by a master. A

Starman — Though it appears to capitalize on the E.T. craze of the mid-'80s, John Carpenter's melding of action, sci-fi and romance actually captures its own quiet brilliance, thanks to an understated performance by Jeff Bridges as an alien entity which adopts the persona of widower Karen Allen's late husband. What follows is a standard chase melodrama involving the aforementioned pair and sinister government agents led by character actor Richard Fox, this is richened by the interactions between Allen and Bridges as she attempts to deal with the memory of her lost love. Charles Marin Smith is especially notable as a government employee who desperately clashes with Fox over the government's insistence on capturing the alien. Pointing to the Voyager 10 space probes pre-recorded welcome messaged, Martin cautions, "We invited him here." B+

New and old acts for Woods

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

Summer in New England means barbeques, mosquitoes and concerts at the Great Woods Center for the Performing Arts in Mansfield, Mass. The 1993 summer line-up has something for everyone.

Three of this summer's hottest tours will stop at the Woods. Van Halen has already sold out their July 9 show and only lawn seats remain for their July 10 show and Sting's performance on June 4.

Aerosmith, who is touring for the first time since their Pump album, will be coming to Mansfield on August 26 and 27. Rumor has it Boston's bad boys will be doing a Mullins Center show in September.

Many of the popular favorites, who have become fixtures in the Great Woods line-up, are returning again this summer. Jimmy Buffet's "Chameleon Caravan" tour will be at the Woods for three sold-out shows on September 2-4. The Steve Miller Band (June 24) and the Beach Boys (August 24) have also announced performances. James Taylor, another Great Woods regular, has yet to announce a 1993 show.

Notably absent from the line-up, is the Lollapalooza tour. Despite the huge success that Lollapalooza has had in the past, the vandalism and damage created by last year's show caused Great Woods officials not to book the show for this year.

Despite the abscence of Lollapalooza, there still will be shows for alternative fans. The tri-bill of the Spin Doctors, Soul Asylum and Screaming Trees (July 14) and Phish (July 24) will all make their Woods debuts this summer.

Whitney Houston, touring in support of her successful Bodyguard Soundtrack, heads up an impressive list of mainstream and pop stars at this year's summer series. Houston will perform two shows on July 14 and 15. Duran Duran (July 26), Tina Turner (July 29) and Sade (Sept. 1) will all be at the Woods this summer.

Classic rock has always been featured at Great Woods and 1993 is no different. In addition to Steve Miller, there will be six nights of classic rock. Former Eagles Glen Frey and Joe Walsh team up for a June 6 show. A tri-bill of Lynard Skynard, Bad Company and Drivin' and Cryin' (June 18), the Moody Blues (July 18), the Allman Brothers (August 1), Steely Dan (August 20) and Jethro Tull (August 28) will all perform at Great Woods this summer.

Hard rock bands are joining forces this summer to try to combat the lack of success their tours have had in recent years. Poison, Damn Yankees and Firehouse will be at the Woods on June 12. Bon Jovi and local favorites Extreme come August 3, followed three dates later by Def Leppard and Ugly Kid Joe.

The recent increase in popularity of country music has earned Clint Black (July 19) and Dwight Yoakam (July 31) their first headlining shows at Great Woods.

Other shows include: Kenny G (June 13), Lyle Lovett (June 17), 10,000 Maniacs and World Party (July 7), the annual Reggae Sunsplash (July 8), the ever popular Barry Manilow (July 16), Yanni (July 25), UB40 (August 2) and an Evening of Blues featuring B.B. King (August 8).

Whether you want to lighten your class load for next semester, accelerate your degree program, earn transfer credits, or graduate on time. UMass Lowell is the place to do it this summer.

Laimbeer is a villain. At least Barkley is interesting and amusing.

• Once Cheers closes down and you're looking for a place to watch the game, hop on over to the Montague Inn. Everybody knows your name.

• Sources close to the foul line have confirmed that prior to each free throw, Utah's Karl Malone says, "Forgive me Lord, I have faked the funk on a nasty dunk."

• There's no reason not to venture down to Lorden Field for this weekend's series between UMass and Temple. It should have Tournament implications and the Minutemen are playing some solid ball.

• Kareem's old Diving Goggles are to Worthy's new Oakley Goggles what "Dick Van Dyke" is to "Seinfeld."

• The Shirl's a grandmother now and rumor has it that she may step down as Bill Parcells' chief scout/personal baker to concentrate fully on young Jacob.

The Shirl, developing the youth of today for a better tomorrow.

• A concerned reader phoned "The Scott's Shots Reader Information Line" last week worried that rumors of Eddie Andelman being named an Honorary Alumnus of this institution were true. Julie (who wouldn't leave her last name in fear of friends discovering she reads this space) could not believe the University would honor the very guy who degraded UMass all through last year's NCAA Tournament.

In what some may consider my first journalistic move, I called UMass' Director of Alumni Relations, John Feudo, for the facts. Lo and behold, Andelman will be named an Honorary Alumnus, as decided by the Alumni Association, according to Feudo.

"It's done to recognize someone who doesn't have a diploma from the University," Feudo said. "But who has made certain commitments or donations."

Feudo explained that although Andelman "raked UMass across the coals" with numerous slights, he did it to incite callers and illicit a response.

"He's getting people to call which is great for us because it gets alums excited, " Feudo said.

"The public relations value he has provided makes it well worth our while to honor him," Feudo said.

It basically means that The Mouth will get on the alumni mailing list and for one shining moment he'll feel as if actually had what it takes to graduate from this fine institution. Dream on Eddie.

• Imagine if the NBA had goons like Dale Hunter? The Celtics could send Lorenzo Williams at Michael Jordan or Larry Johnson. Good thing hockey's cleaning up its image.

• Resident tennis expert Dave Rivera tells us that Monica Seles has a slicing backhand to match her sliced back. Even in the darkest of episodes we must find humor.

• Cherish Kevin McHale's final days, you'll tell your children about him.

• Keep your feet in bounds and your eyes on Mo.

teams — at 6-foot-4, he is an imposing face-off specialist who can also score.

Garber also pointed to Rob Gutheil, a junior midfielder with five goals and 17 assists, and to the Brown defense.

"You don't get to be the fifth-ranked team in the nation without a strong defense," Garber said of Brown.

But the Gorillas didn't get to eighth in the USILA poll without an outstanding defense that has stepped up to every challenge thrown it this season. If Garber sticks with his current game plan of Jim Panetta and Chris Nentwich at defensive midfield, it's likely that Dennis Kelly, who has shut down Rutgers' Ryan O'Shea and Syracuse attacker Matt Riter, will cover either Marti or Towers, with Kenny Randazzo, Jim Byrnes and Matt Noone picking picking up the remaining Brown scoring threats.

Brown, for their part, will be faced with the daunting challenge of trying to slow down Mark Millon. Millon, now third in scoring and second in points per game behind Derek Laub of Colgate, had a huge game against Syracuse and has said throughout the season that he's looking forward to today's game.

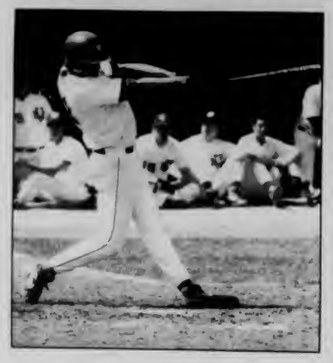
Baseball commits seven errors in loss



ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

Justin Kelly and the University of Massachusetts baseball team dropped a 13-8 decision to Northeastern University yesterday at Earl Lorden Field.

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team struggled in the field yesterday at Lorden Field, committing seven errors and losing to Northeastern University 13-10.

In what could only be described as the worst loss of the year, the Minutemen (16-19) blew an 8-6 seventh inning lead by allowing seven unanswered runs. A ninth-inning, two-out rally fell short as Andy Pelis flied out with the bases loaded to end the game.

Mike Glavine and Peter Schulz were the stars of the game for the Huskies (11-16). Glavine, the NU first baseman, hit a grounder with a runner on third in the eighth that UMass third baseman Steve Corradi threw away to tie the game at 8-8.

In the top of the ninth, after two were out, second baseman Andy Kiah booted what was an easy grounder by leadoff man Mark Hopkins. Schulz then drove in the game-winning RBI when his two-strike double sailed over left fielder Justin Howard's head.

The Huskies took a 9-8 lead that became 12-8 when it was Glavine's turn for heroics. Glavine hit a two-strike, three-run dinger over the left field fence off reliever Jeff Toothaker's change up after Toothaker had blown two fastballs by Glavine earlier in the count.

"I was looking for the change up and I got it," said Glavine. "I was struggling (0 for 5 before the HR) and I didn't hit the ball well earlier, but I got a hold of it."

The four-error ninth inning in the field for UMass certainly didn't help its chances at the plate in the bottom of the ninth. Nevertheless, the Minutemen refused to quit and scored two two-out runs, one on a Greg LaRocca RBI single, the other when Justin Kelly was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded. Bill Knight scored the last run to cut the lead to 13-10. The team came up just short, and fielding, not hitting, was the difference.

"I have nothing to say, you guys make up your own stories," head coach Mike Stone said to reporters. "It's obvious; the game speaks for itself. How many errors did we have? Seven?"

To its defense, the team was swinging the bats well, hitting four home runs, all in the first half of the ball game. Three solo shots in the second, third, and fourth innings by Bill Knight, Steve Corradi and Andy Pelis, respectively, kept UMass in the game while Northeastern plated five runs in the third of their own.

Knight's three-run shot, his second of the day, was the big hit, as it gave UMass the lead, at least for a little while.

UMass' defense was making routine plays look impossible, as Corradi dropped a pop-up to the right of the mound in the ninth and the catcher Pelis threw the ball into center field on a steal attempt.

"We make the plays, but a couple of errors here and there and they made a couple of big hits," said Knight. "It makes it much tougher when it happens in the late innings with our backs against the wall and it's frustrating because we showed we could've won, if we had more than three or six outs left."

Claffey's perfect game leads softball to sweep

By JASON NASH
Collegian Staff

There is perfect and then there is perfect.

Darlene Claffey followed the lines of perfection yesterday throwing a perfect game in game two of the double header, helping her University of Massachusetts Minutewoman (23-19 overall, 7-1 in the Atlantic 10) softball team to complete a sweep of the University of Vermont Catamounts (6-1, 10-0) at Totman Field.

Claffey, who is now 12-7, cruised through five flawless innings, facing the minimum 15 batters. Of those fifteen, Claffey fanned eight.

"I could tell from the beginning of warm-ups that she was throwing well," said senior catcher Sherri Kuchinskas. "They [UVM] helped Darlene out by chasing some balls. Her rise in her pitch was working well."

The Minutewomen jumped out to a 4-0 lead after two innings. In the fifth inning, the Minutewomen pounded out seven hits for five runs, ending the game at 10-0.

Claffey's only threat to her perfect game came in the top of the fifth when a Catamount hitter hit a fly ball to left field that was caught by Stacey Nichols.

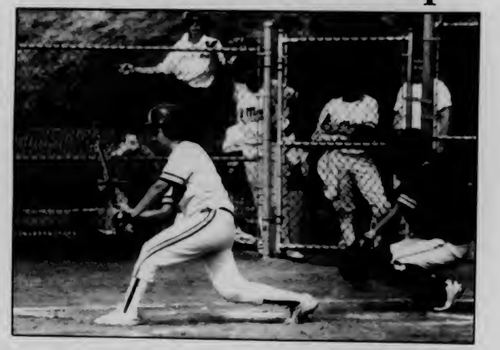
Game one saw more of the same from the Minutewomen, who managed six runs on eight hits on offense. UMass was led by stellar pitching from UMass hurler Kelly Daut and reliever Dana Colla. Daut scattered three hits over five innings, giving up no earned runs and improving her record to 11-11.

From the plate, UMass was solid, scoring four runs in the first thanks a to a two-run single provided by Jenn Salisbury, driving in Kuchinskas and Rachel Lawson.

"It took us a little while for us to get going," said Kuchinskas. "We all seemed to hit the ball well today and get into groove."

Today, the Minutewomen travel to Kingston, R.I. for a make-up doubleheader with the University of Rhode Island WRams. A win would vault the Minutewomen to another A-10 regular season championship and lock-up the No. 1 seed in the A-10 tournament.

"We're ready to wrap it up," said Kuchinskas. "I hope we play well. We need to get prepared for the post-season."



ANDREA MIGLIASSI / COLLEGIAN

Second baseman Tracey DuEst and the rest of the UMass softball team swept a doubleheader from Vermont yesterday at Totman Field by scores of 6-1 and 10-0.

Gorillas face Brown for NE title

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

One might think bouncing back from a tough loss is difficult. Not when your next game determines both an NCAA seeding and local bragging rights for the next year.

That's the situation which will be resolved this afternoon at 3 p.m. at Richard F. Garber Field, when the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, three days after falling just short against Syracuse, faces the fifth-ranked Brown Bruins for the New England Championship. Unless UMass draws a home game in the playoffs, this will be lax fans' last chance to see the eighth-ranked Gorillas in action.

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

UMass midfielder Eric Triolo and the rest of the Gorillas go toe-to-toe with Brown University for the New England championship today at 3 p.m. at Garber Field.

"We have to play smart and not make mistakes," said UMass coach Ted Garber, whose Gorillas were victimized by an opportunistic Syracuse team that pounced on nearly every UMass mistake. "We have to make them earn their goals."

The past three years, UMass vs. Brown has determined the New England title. Brown has won the last three, including an NCAA quarterfinal in a downpour in 1990, a sudden-death overtime thriller on the Hill in '91, and last year's 22-13 debacle at Stevenson Field in Providence.

That game sticks in the mind of UMass players. The Bruins ran off 11 consecutive goals in the first half of a game that saw a lot of penalties, trash-talking and rudeness from student fans sitting behind the UMass bench.

But coach Ted Garber downplayed the rivalry and the revenge factor in this afternoon's contest, showing more concern about shutting down the potent Bruin attack.

"You can't play sports succesfully out of revenge," Garber said. "Your emotions get the best of you and you take bad penalties. You've gotta play out of pride — and we're playing for the New England Championship on our home field."

Garber said the Bruins are a "legitimate fifth" in the USILA polls. Their only losses have come at the hands of Syracuse (16-11 in the Dome) and defending NCAA champions Princeton (9-7 in Jersey). Most recently, Brown held off a challenge from Ivy League rivals Cornell, 12-11.

The players to watch for the Bruins are Oliver Marti (40-14-54, fourth nationally) and Andy Towers (42-18-60, seventh). Towers creates some concern for opposing

Scott's shots

Boston Red Sox General Manager Lou Gorman announced today the signing of Jacob Scott Dennis, a seven pound, six ounce southpaw from Sharon, Mass. The lifetime contract guarantees Dennis a position in the pitching rotation as the Red Sox make their pennant drive of 2017.

"He's a great talent who's already showing tendencies to suck his left thumb," said Gorman of my one week-old nephew. "He's developing a nasty spitter and the fork ball's coming along. He'll bring the pennant to Boston."

David

- It's clearly going to be a season of streaks for the Red Sox, culminating in October with a four-game winning streak against the Phillies. Spring has certainly sprung.

Serbs vote against UN peace plan

By DUSAN STOJANOVIC
Associate Press

MOUNT JAHORINA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The Bosnian Serbs' self-proclaimed parliament effectively rejected a U.N. peace plan to end the war in Bosnia early Thursday by voting instead for a referendum on the plan.

The vote defied pressure from the Serbs' backers in Yugoslavia and abroad, and heightened prospects of military intervention to end Europe's bloodiest conflict since World War II.

The parliament's deputies voted 51-2 for a May 15-16 referendum on the peace plan. Twelve deputies abstained and 10 deputies present earlier in the day left before the vote.

After the vote, the president of Serb-dominated Yugoslavia Dobrica Cosic said, "The [Bosnian] parliament took the worst decision, and I don't know what the next night will bring."

U.N. mediator Cyrus Vance said on Cable News Network that, "This is something that would obviously have to go to the Security Council. . . They will be under. . . extremely heavy pressure" to change their minds.

The vote past midnight came after leaders from Greece and Serb-dominated Yugoslavia joined the Bosnian Serbs' leader in pleading with the lawmakers to accept the plan to avert military intervention.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic, who accepted the plan Sunday at a peace conference in Greece, said, "Either we accept this plan, or we can expect fierce attacks by NATO forces."

President Clinton has called for military measures, including air strikes against Serb artillery, if the Serbs back away from a settlement.

European allies and Russia have not directly endorsed his calls, however, despite overtures this week by Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

As Karadzic spoke, armed Serb militiamen in camouflage milled about the "Heavenly Valley" hotel where the parliament was meeting, 20 miles southeast of Sarajevo.

Despite such pressure, a hard-line mood prevailed. Many deputies feel that they would be giving up hard-fought gains if they accept the peace plan.

Bosnia's Croats and Muslims have already signed the plan, which gives the Serbs 43 percent of Bosnia in three non-contiguous provinces, but denies them land links to

Three recognized for diversity

O'Brien rewards contributions to multiculturalism

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts recognized three members of the campus community for their efforts at promoting diversity with the presentation of the first annual Chancellor's Awards for Multiculturalism last night.

Ketu Katrak, associate professor of English; Madeline Peters, assistant director of Disability Services; and Sabuur Abdul-Kareem, a doctoral student and teaching assistant in Education, were presented the newly-created awards which were initiated by Chancellor Richard O'Brien.

Recognized for efforts in promoting multiculturalism on campus, the three honorees were awarded with a certificate of appreciation and a $1,000 cash award.

Last night's dinner celebration marked the first annual awards program recognizing individuals whose efforts go beyond the expectations of their positions.

O'Brien said two months ago he came up with the idea for the awards to prove to the campus that the administration is serious about recognizing and achieving efforts toward multiculturalism.

According to O'Brien, the idea for these awards came primarily from the administration's desire to recognize specific individuals for their contributions to promoting multiculturalism, and to force the community to ask themselves who is making special contributions and to raise their consciousness.

"This was one idea which my fellow colleagues strongly supported me on," O'Brien said.

Each year an award will be given to one member of the university's staff, a member of the faculty and a student of the University, either undergraduate or graduate.

Speaker says inequality due to masculine 'myth'

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

John Stoltenberg

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

Masculinity is a "myth" and is the biggest cause of sexual inequality in the United States today, a well-known profeminist men's activist told students at the Campus Center Auditorium last night.

John Stoltenberg, author of Refusing to be a Man: Essays on Sex and Justice, said growing up he constantly felt insecure because his "manliness" was always being measured against other men.

"Growing up I was always terrified because the stakes were so high," Stoltenberg said. "The punishment for not being manly enough seemed so utterly severe.

"One of the things the feminist movement of the '70s did for me is that it liberated me from the hold masculinity had on me," Stoltenberg said.

Stoltenberg said men who strive to become more masculine are frustrated because there is always someone more manly than themselves.

"The dirty little secret about masculinity is that for it to be demonstrated and

Dems, GOP get compromise on motor voter bill in House

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associate Press

WASHINGTON — The House on Wednesday approved a scaled-back "motor voter" registration bill that Democratic supporters said would "give a political voice to millions of Americans."

The vote was 259-164.

Republicans fought the measure, saying it would give orders to the states on how to register voters without providing the money needed to pay for the changes.

Democrats suggested the GOP simply didn't want more people to register.

The Senate is expected to approve the compromise reached by House-Senate negotiators and send the bill to the White House later in the week for President Clinton's signature.

"Here's another example of President Clinton moving on a campaign commitment and delivering," said Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M. "It will give a political voice to millions of Americans."

"It will widen the circle of democracy even more," said House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo. "It makes the voter registration process user-friendly."

The measure permits voter registration by mail or at motor vehicle offices and a wide range of other agencies, including public assistance and disability offices.

Under the compromise insisted on by Senate Republicans, states are required to offer voter registration at welfare offices under a set of rules designed to prevent coercion by officials favoring one party over another.

States would be permitted, but not required to allow people to register to vote at unemployment offices.

And voter registration also would be offered to people seeking to enlist in the armed forces.

"It mandates pushing new costs on the states," said Rep. Porter Goss, R-Fla. "It takes away the right of local voting officials to fully purge the voting roles, opening the doors to fraud."

"It should be called the auto-fraudo bill," said Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La.

proved, it has to assert itself in a hierarchy," he said. "This is so someone else can have enough, except, there's never enough."

Masculinity, Stoltenberg said, has forced men to relish inequality.

"In order to buy into the myth of masculinity, inequality is supposed to turn you on, and equality is supposed to make you feel cold," he said. "Male supremacy is the political paradigm of social inequality."

Stoltenberg said sexual gentrification, homophobia, male bonding and pornography are the agents by which men have asserted their dominance over women. He said sexual gentrification has promoted the idea that women are objects to be owned and used.

"Sexual gentrification is the 'thingification' of a human being, turning people into things to be possessed and used according to your own will," Stoltenberg said. "It leaves men unable to be aroused without pictures or toys. We need to reclaim a time when sex was not linked to objectification."

Stoltenberg said the practice of male bonding prevents men from ever completely bonding with women in a relationship.

"Male bonding is the way that men act together to prove to other men that they are callous, not empathic, and powerful, not insignificant, which makes them men," Stoltenberg said.

"Men in a male bond swear loyalty to male supremacy," he said. "It is a test to show that a man's loyalty to another man is greater than any loyalty he could have for a woman.

"The woman notices there has been a split in yourself, and maybe she becomes invisible," Stoltenberg said. "This is the texture of relationships for most men in society."

Senate votes allocation of RSO money

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

Approximately $149,000 was allocated to Registered Student Organizations at last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting.

The money allocated to RSOs was part of an approximately $1.8 million budget, mainly drawn from the Student Activities Trust Fund, which was brought up to a vote by the Senate. Due to the length of debate, the meeting was adjourned and the budget will be finalized at next week's meeting.

The Student Activities Trust Fund is primarily supported by the student activities fee, which will be $84 per student in the next academic year. The fee is currently $112.50 per year, but has been reduced as a result of the recent reorganization of the trust fund.

The original budget proposal for Registered Student Organizations totaled approximately $153,000, which exceeds last year's budget by $20,000, said Sen. Jeremy Hathaway, a member of the Senate's budget committee.

The proposed budget also included allocations of $783,748 for University agencies; $51,330 for the Student Government Association; $43,501 for the Five College Bus; $50,000 for the Spring Concert Fund and $50,000 for short-term reserves.

The budget also covered mandated costs and enrollment-based line items totalling $655,297, which include area governments, PVTA and the Board of Governors.

Student government members were given the opportunity to amend the proposed budget before its passage on behalf of the organizations represented in the budget or at their own discretion.

Greek Area Senator Jeff Turco said he would push to amend the budget of all student organizations having student payrolls, moving to cut those costs from the budget.

Students should not need financial compensation for their involvement in student activities and too much of the trust fund is paying for students' salaries, Turco said.

The proposed amendments at the meeting included:

•A move to cut student payroll for the Black Mass Communications Project, totalling $7,269. The move, proposed by Sen. Turco, was defeated.

• A move to reverse an allocation of $100 from the European Club to the Debate Union. The move, made by Sen. Paul Gleason, was defeated 19-18, with two abstentions.

•A move to cut funding of NOMMO News by $1000, to be transferred to the Haitian American Student Association, with a clause that NOMMO News, HASA and the Black Student Union will co-sponsor events to which HASA and BSU will each contribute $500. The move, proposed by Sen. Ricardo Neal, was passed.

• A move to cut student payroll for NOMMO News, totalling $4,151. The move, made by Sen. Turco, was passed.

•A move to cut the Republican Club's budget by $750 for the following items: subscriptions, bottled water, books and periodicals, energy costs and speakers. The move, made by Sen. Rafail Maryakhin, was defeated.

• A separate move to cut the Republican Club's budget by $50 for funding of bottled water. The move was passed.

• A move to loan $9,000 to the Ski Club for their annual Ski sale. The move, made by Sen. Anthony Ong, was defeated.

Motions to reconsider the amendments regarding the student payroll for NOMMO News and the Ski Club were passed. The amendments will be debated at next week's meeting.

The budget of the Lesbian Gay Bisexual Alliance, totalling $6,914, was passed by the Senate.

The LBGA, which suspended its office operations in mid-April because of a low rate of student participation in activities, has been re-opened.

Brothers are 'lazy for a cause'

Couch potatoes bring needed cash to Tower Library

JESSICA TAVERNA / COLLEGIAN

Four brothers from Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity appear comfortable as they participate in the second annual Couch Potato Marathon to raise money for the University library.

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

"Study guilt free, knowing that you helped save the library."

Chances are if you've walked by the plaza of the library any time since noon on Tuesday, you've heard this or one of a number of other slogans coming from the second annual Coach Potato Marathon.

For the second straight year, the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon have camped out for 48 hours to raise money for the badly underfunded library.

"We raised $500 for the library last year," said Ron Burns, Sigma Phi Epsilon president and creator of the event. "The project was an attempt to bring attention to the library's urgent fiscal needs, and it worked."

"We lay around the house all day anyway. We thought we'd be lazy for a cause," said fraternity member Bryan Fuller. "We're doing nothing. . . for you."

Even the rain didn't hinder the marathon. When the downpour began yesterday afternoon, the fraternity's TV was covered with a tarp, and the brothers received an unexpected shower.

The entire house, which has approximately 50 members, is participating in the event. Brothers take turns on 24-hour shifts. They are equipped with a TV, a VCR and a cellular phone. Pop Tarts have been the food of choice during the day (provided by Kappa Kappa Gamma), while pizza dominates the evening hours.

Fuller said his goals for this year's event were to "watch as many movies as possible and do better than last year."

"We always appreciate any interest," said Betty Brace, head of Circulation and Access Services at the Tower Library. "The library is grateful for the support. They recognized the library's financial woes and wanted to help out."

Brace said she believed this was the first time an event like this has been entirely organized and run by a student organization.

Response to the event has been mixed from the passers-by.

"Most people duck and throw a quarter," said Fuller.

"They look at us and laugh," freshman brother Sanjy Patel said.

Some people have brought them food, and for the most part, people seem pretty amused by the whole idea.

Two scientists injured in blast

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

A chemical flask exploded early yesterday morning in the Lederle Graduate Research Tower, causing minor injuries to two post-doctoral scientists conducting an experiment.

Andreas Kucht, of North Village, and Juan Carlos Flores of 710 North Pleasant St., were treated and released from Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

The explosion occurred at the end of a 12-hour-long research project early yesterday at 1:03 a.m. on the 13th floor of Lederle Graduate Research Tower.

Kucht was injured in the neck and forearms and Flores sustained injuries to his left forearm.

Marvin Rausch, chemistry professor and head of the lab, said the lacerations were caused by flying glass and both men are fine.

Rausch said the experiment has been done previously a half dozen times at the University with no problems.

Rausch also said the experiment was done according to standard operating procedures, including the use of a fume hood, so damage was minimal.

Rausch said no dangerous or unusual materials were involved. He said experiments are always done in pairs, so in case one person is injured, another is always there.

"In research, you never really know, which is why we require everyone to work in pairs," Rausch said.

The chemistry department is investigating the incident to determine the cause of the explosion.

The victims were treated by Amherst Ambulance personnel.

The awards were based on nominations from the University community. An awards committee, whose members are drawn from the Multicultural Advisory Board, then recommended the recipients to O'Brien.

Vice Chancellor for Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action Fred Tillis, chairperson of the Multicultural Advisory Board, said this is not the first time the campus has been interested in multiculturalism, and concerns will continue throughout the years.

The Multicultural Advisory Board consists of 28 members from diverse backgrounds. The Board received 32 nominations and recommended the top nine to O'Brien, who then chose the three winners.

Katrak, who teaches several courses using a multicultural approach to literature, said society needs to question how different cultures interact and remind itself of the goal of building a diverse social community.

"We need to promote multiculturalism in our curriculum, and have equal representation of all students within the program," Abdul-Kareem said, a doctoral student in Education.

Peters, who said she was inspired by working with disabled students, said she feels multiculturalism is about teaching people about other people.

"It is time to really get to know the people that you are working with, and take advantage of all opportunities," Peters said.

University President Michael Hooker said the world economy is becoming more and more global, as opposed to being dominated by competition between nations, and it is time to erase competitiveness.

"It is time to recognize that multiculturalism is the wave of the future, and it needs to be acknowledged if this University is going to have a future," Hooker said.

Allen L. Sessoms, former deputy chief of Missions for the U.S. Embassy in Mexico, and now executive vice president under Hooker, said the awards are symbolic and bring about awareness of the importance of multiculturalism.

"Hooker asked me to help him match visions with reality in helping UMass become the very best," Sessoms said. "UMass has tremendous potential and everything from now on will pull towards greatness."

"Tonight we have resolved nothing — we have started something," O'Brien said in his closing remarks.

Reflections on EarthDay 1993

It has been a few weeks now since Earth Day 1993. the weather has improved and Mother Earth is in full bloom. It is good to see people out and about, embracing the gifts of spring. I hope amidst the gleeful activities of spring that people do not forget about the significance of this event. Earth Day is commonly criticized as a day for everyone to feel good about being environmentally conscious. I do not think that is a criticism but an asset to the concept of Earth Day. It is a day for all of us to reflect and reassess our responsibility to the state of the environment. The challenge is to burrow our thoughts from the day into our natural mode of thinking. A few weeks since Earth Day 1993, I wonder what people are thinking.

Bosnia, Haiti, civil rights, human rights, economy, jobs, health care. . . As I reflect on this past Earth Day it occurs to me that Earth Day is not just about sound ecological information. Inherent in the environmental movement are social, political and economic issues, issues whose inter-relatedness are yearning to be discovered. Environmental racism is a classic example of the connected nature of environmental and social issues. Although the injustice of siting toxic waste dumps in minority communities is not new, the call for environmental justice is relatively recent. This movement encourages a collaboration of efforts by environmentalists and civil rights activists. I hope future Earth Days will be rooted and secure enough in our annual celebration calendar to support pressing social issues such as racism. It is the responsibility of environmentalists to engage other social issues in the call for a sound environmental ethical standard because the environmental movement speaks to need for a change in our moral foundation.

I support a collaborative effort of all groups to bring to this community a new kind of Earth Day, redefined to reflect the complexity of issues we face in our society. I hope people apply the concept of Earth Day to their life and in so doing think about their responsibility to the aforementioned issues. Good luck with UMass Earth Day 1994!

The sights and sounds of four UMass years

It has been said that quotation is the last refuge of the scoundrel. Well here I am in my last refuge — my last Collegian column — and I certainly feel like a scoundrel.

"I'd love to stick around, but I'm runnin' behind" — Jackson Browne.

Four years was more than enough UMass for me. I don't mean to bust on five-year students who genuinely need the extra time. I probably would have enjoyed an extra year myself.

Greg
SUKIENNIK

But the money's all gone and I'm getting restless. Furthermore, too many people know who I am as it is — a sure sign that it's time to leave. I came to this school to be a student, not a celebrity. Some campus celebrities posing as students would do well to reassess their priorities.

"Some'll call your bluff, some'll call themselves friends, some who don't need you never call you again" — Danny O'Keefe.

Moving on means leaving people behind, for better or for worse. We've all been through this before in high school. You say you're not going to forget each other but two years and no phone calls or letters later you're left wondering what the hell happened. It's unfortunate but inevitable.

There are quite a few people I don't want to lose track of. Some I've already lost.

Ever have someone come up to you in a bar and say they hate you? Four years ago that would've sent me packing for the Coolidge Bridge. Four years later I've learned to deal with it. Acceptance is nice, but you can't get it from everyone. Those are the rules.

"There is no bloody revolution" — The Police.

I've seen the rallies on the Student Union steps. I've read the placards and heard the speeches. I've grown sick of "hey-hey, ho-ho." You wonder why I'm ready to leave?

There are some extremely worthy causes on this campus, and some very admirable people who have dedicated themselves to furthering them. But there are also the self-proclaimed, self-promoting "revolutionaries" who hold the bullhorns and hope you'll follow them blindly. Don't.

"I am the morning DJ at WOLD" — Harry Chapin.

Actually, that quote has no significance to anything I want to say here, except that I enjoyed my stint doing the 9 a.m. news at WMUA. I just always loved that line.

Well, wait a minute. Like the narrator in that song, I do feel o-l-d. That's yet another reason why I feel compelled to get out of this place. I'm 23. Running around uptown and staying up 'till 3 every morning has become pretty mundane.

That's enough song quotes. The rest is from the heart.

When I came to this newspaper four years ago I had lots of potential, but not much else. But I knew one thing — I wanted to write or edit. Luckily I got the chance to do both, and have some fun with it, too.

After the ugliness went down last year ("You label me, I label you, and I dub thee Unforgiven" — Metallica) I thought about leaving this place for good. But deep down I knew better. I could never leave this place. The friends I have made here and the common bonds I've shared are dear to me, dearer than I thought I'd ever admit in a Collegian column.

When that last issue is put it's yellow print box and driven off to press, well, I don't know what my reaction will be.

But I'll never feel anything but pride for being a part of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian and I'm not ashamed to say I've loved every minute of it.

Take care. I'll see you around.

Greg Sukiennik was a Collegian columnist.

Students turn stealing into game

Isn't a shame that four to five people have to rip off the Munchy Store for candy bars, M&Ms and, like on Saturday, April 24, AA batteries.

And then these people give the manager or person in charge a hard time with vulgar language, and pretend they are in the right.

If they have nothing else to do, then they should act like college students and not hoodlums, who make a game out of ripping off items that they have no intention of paying for. Be on the alert and watch for them.

As an institution of education, are we not teaching values of trust, honesty and responsibility?

Karla Bordeaux
Manager
Franklin Munchy Store

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Repeat after me: "Rich, beefy gravy."

Where is the logic in promoting diversity by speaking in a language most people can't understand? That is, unless you don't want most people to understand.

The Union Program Council's little secret, the Spring Concert bands, often ends up like this: lots of great rumors of great bands circulate greatly while UPC, thinking it's so great, makes like it's some great secret but ends up being a great disappointment. 'Course even though the bands aren't that great, students will drink great quantities of alcohol and still have a great time.

What do you add to instant water?

Things I won't get around to doing before I graduate, become unemployed and lose my health insurance:

- insert the word "eclectic" randomly throughout the Arts & Living section. No one would notice.
- insert sets of numbers in parentheses [example: (21-3)] randomly throughout the Sports section. Again, no one would notice.
- publish a list of administrators who wear toupees, and another of those who should (really, it's OK, just look at Sen. Joe Biden these days).
- make some really atrocious and obvious editing mistakes (oops! I've done that already).
- get the word [expletive] past the editorial editor.
- attend a really good Spring Concert.
- use "Who is the Collegian?" as the Quote of the Day.

Experiments in stupidity: using a match to test a gas leak. People actually do this.

Dr. Neutopia. You can't make this stuff up.

"All right son, just answer me this. How do you feel about long hours and low pay?" The correct answer to this would be: "I love long hours and low pay."

How many students out there have actually seen a dean? How do we know they really exist?

Marc
ELLIOTT

I've taken a lot of crap from people over the years for working at a newspaper that makes as many spelling, editing, reporting and taste errors as the Collegian. But looking at some of the other Happy Valley publications floating around the UMass campus, I've got say that if they didn't carry News of the Weird, they'd be worth even less than they are (and that isn't much). Except, of course, the MIM Notes, which is a laugh riot from cover to cover. C'mon guys, admit it. You're not revolutionaries at all. You're comedians.

How much to schedule a "hit" on the Jerky Bros.?

How long until the University has more vice chancellors than students?

How come no one reacts to this stuff?

How many stupid questions can one man ask?

And to think I almost made it through two years of writing editorial columns without once using the term "politically correct." There, once is enough I guess.

Paying tuition for a year at UMass is sort of like buying a coupon for the $[fill in the blank 'cause we're not done payin' yet] million Mullins Arena.

So how many mindless suckers out there actually bought Calipari's white and then maroon T-shirts? C'mon, just admit it. This is sort of like asking your parents if they voted for Nixon. (Wow, my last chance to get people to see Coach Cal is actually the merchandising pirate he is supposed to be.)

Ack. Ack. Ack. Hold on. OK. That's "eh."

Before I go I just want to be straight with all of my wonderful readers out there whom I love so dearly and I trust would give me a job if they could: I have never, ever, in my life, slept with or had sex with Joey Buttafuoco. Really.

Anyone who says they're graduating with "no regrets" is lying, to you and to themselves. Personally, I regret never telling them this. Wait a minute, I guess I just did.

Marc Elliott is a former Collegian columnist. The views and opinions expressed in this article do represent those held by the Collegian and the University and President Jack Kennedy (but he's dead so that doesn't really matter), whether they'll admit it or not.

Today will soon be a part of tomorrow's musty memories

Graduation. Sigh. It seems like just yesterday that I was suffocating up in Northeast during the summer of '89 freshman orientation program. I met so many people in those three days. Each person was unique, but they all had one thing in common: a sense of almost unbearable excitement about the adventure we were about to embark upon. We knew that the college experience would comprise a major portion of the memories we would cherish into old age, and we each had our own set of expectations.

The quiet woman next door longed to be a sorority sister. My roommate hoped to become a member of the honor society. The crazy guy who almost convinced me that his first name really was Elvis wanted to party as much as possible yet remain on the dean's list. On and on, their faces flash in my memory, smiling, heat-flushed and eager. Lately, when I recognize one of them on campus, I wonder, Did you do it? Did you make it? Do you have regrets?

I could've. I should've. I would've. I might have. Regrets. Yeah, I've got a few.

I should've driven PVTA because the drivers' seats look like thrones and they excite me.

I shouldn't have begun every COINS assignment by perusing the highly distracting, now defunct Sex file.

I shouldn't have apologized to Ted Marvelious when I gave him a flat on the Concourse two years ago and sent him sprawling. I might have seen him first and done it on purpose.

I wouldn't have eaten the tuna fish.

Lori
O'CONNOR

The PVTA, sex, Ted and tuna. Not a bad record for four years. Know why? Because long ago I realized that the only way to avoid having a long scroll of regrets once I slipped out of these academic handcuffs was to listen to the words of author Emile Zola:

If you ask me what I came to this world to do, I will tell you. I came to live out loud.

The other day, it showered and the worms began beaching themselves on the sidewalk. I spent 10 minutes kicking them back into the grass before the sun could pan fry them. Then I sat down on a bench and had a conversation about artificial insemination with two old men. A weird afternoon? Maybe. Was it interesting? You bet.

Vitality. Zest. Falling off to sleep at night knowing that you spread your arms wide and embraced every moment of the day. That's what it's all about.

Too often we get so caught up in realizing our dreams that we start treating life like a paint by numbers project. When everything doesn't follow our mental blueprint, our spirits break. We let the daily grind chew us up. We have regrets.

It's such an abbreviated ride. Don't spend it making hospital corners and replacing the box of baking soda in the refrigerator. Don't stick living, truly living, up on the bedpost and assume that it will still have some flavor when you get around to chewing it again. Try to remember a time when wearing shoes was a hindrance, when you weren't afraid of bees, when the chirping of the crickets was not an annoyance but a wondrous thing because it meant that you were up past your bedtime.

Go ahead. Flush propriety and script. Puddle jump in white pants. Play with a stranger's baby. Blow the dandelion fluff. Eat the garnish. Jog braless. Read the graffiti. Embrace the unexpected, because before long, today will be nothing more than a section of some musty old photo album that you'll drag out of the closet on the holidays to show your kids. College. Youth. Life. All wrapped up in a neat package and stored beneath the linens. What are you waiting for? Put down the camera and get in the picture. Savor every second.

Live each one out loud.

White society is falsely accused

Throughout my years as a UMass student I have found myself rarely offended by articles printed in the Collegian, however after reading Brett Andrews' letter [April 29], I felt compelled to respond. I was truly saddened that someone with good intentions could be so hypocritical and misinformed. In Mr. Andrews' letter he makes several accusations about "White society" both on and off campus that are simply not true.

I find it difficult to believe that a student who has been as UMass for at least a semester can think that the social life at this university is strictly dominated by the "White majority." If you open your eyes you will discover that nearly everyday on campus organizations representing Asians, Latin Americans, African-Americans and homosexuals, are offering some type of alternative venue. UMass, believe it or not, is not the enemy of diversity that a very vocal element of our campus claims. It has gained a reputation around the country as being a highly progressive and racially aware institution.

I cannot dispute the fact that there are disagreements between campus groups, but it upsets me to think how much time and energy is being wasted on on-campus witch hunts, instead of spent on educating those who preach true hatred and intolerance off campus.

In his article, Mr. Andrews also calls for a unification of all minority students against the forces of "White society," not realizing that by saying this he is contributing to the prejudiced "elitism and exclusionary tactics" he professes to abhor. The struggle for unification is a human struggle, not a factional one. The slogan, "None of us are free until all of us are free," applies to everyone.

What distressed me most about Mr. Andrews' letter, however, was his misinformed statement pertaining once again to "White society." He claimed, "Everyday Irish Catholics die for their right to be free in a so-called democratic nation — Great Britain." Contrary to popular American mythology, England did not decide one afternoon to roll its tanks into Belfast and seize control of Northern Ireland.

The conflict between Protestant and Catholic is well over 300 years old and highly complicated. Irish Catholics invited the British army to protect them during Ulster's civil war, which continues today because of political factionalism. The desire for "freedom" isn't an issue in this situation. And to set the record straight, the Irish Catholics aren't the only ones taking losses. The IRA, a radical terrorist faction, and as much of a group of "freedom fighters" as the PLO, have taken hundreds of innocent lives since 1969 in a pointless campaign of never ending bloodshed and retaliation, funded largely by American money.

Hatred, oppression and "the label of difference", are not inventions of "White society" but of the human race as a whole. Every society, in every era, in every country has participated in discrimination at one point or another. It's time to get beyond factionalism and finger pointing and to observe the big picture. As for you Mr. Andrews, it's time you enrolled in a history class.

Musicians are teachers of struggle

The Wailers are coming to campus, along with Naughty by Nature and Dinosaur Jr. for Spring Concert this coming Sunday.

Bob Marley used to be in the main spotlight for the Wailers until his death in 1980. Many people are familiar with Marley and his songs. "The guy was awesome," is a response you normally get when you mention his name. Why was he awesome? "Dude, because he smoked a lot of pot." Not quite. He was truly a genius and an awesome guy, not because he took a lot of hits from the bong, but because he took a lot of hits.

The words he sang are of pain, anger and suffering in his Jamaican homeland, and other places where his people were being oppressed.

In his song "I Shot the Sheriff," he is telling how this authority figure is keeping him down, along with everyone in his community, so he has to do something about it — he shoots him. He's not being a rebel pot smoker who decides to kill a cop, but a victim uprising, trying to free himself.

"Burnin' and Lootin'," on the Wailers' Burnin' LP that came out in the early '70s is reminiscent of what happened in L.A. last year. The song tells of how the poor, Jamaican majority uprises after the government does not acknowledge the fact that they are not being treated equally, and are dying in violent scrimmages with the police. Though many people are listening to Bob Marley and enjoying his songs, too many people don't hear what he is saying.

Nowadays groups like Public Enemy, Ice-T and Naughty by Nature are speaking and people are buying their words. If most of the people paid a little attention to what these groups are saying than they might understand why there are so many angry Black people.

I'm going to Spring Concert to see Naughty by Nature, along with most of this campus. I'll probably see tons of people "Hey'n and Hoin" with highs and buzzes on, but not knowing there was a struggle for these men to get here. And they're still struggling because the faces in the crowd are looking at entertainers and not seeing teachers. They teach about the struggles of the ghetto and say, "If you've never been to the ghetto, don't ever come to the ghetto; you won't understand the ghetto."

Understanding what these people are saying could have a major affect in this society because it reaches out to so many people.

So listen to what these groups have to say, you might learn a lot; and if you haven't, then instead of reaching for your "Hip Hop Hooray," grab your Joey Lawrence, Snow or Vanilla Ice.

Equal opportunity for sexual assault

I am writing to respond to two recent letters. The first was submitted by an anonymous woman who recounted being sexually harassed at the Funk-o-Thon [Collegian, April 29]. The second letter was a response to the first, written in a spirit of ignorance, racism and misogyny by a Pierce Parker [Collegian, May 5].

To the woman who was harassed: I would like to thank you. The day before your letter was printed, I was groped, fondled and frightened by a very drunk man on the bus. Somehow, I had the courage to yell at him and threaten him with arrest before he finally stumbled off the bus. Not many women find themselves in situations of harassment where they can scare the man, but I did and I was lucky. I was scared, angry and shaking, but proud of myself for standing up. Later on, though, I began to question whether or not my actions were called for, whether I had overreacted or was just being hypersensitive.

Your letter helped me to understand that no reaction is an overreaction when it comes to a woman's body. If I don't want to be touched, that's it. I don't need to justify it or explain it to anyone. My body is mine, and I am the only one who decides who touches me. I am sorry for what happened to you, and I know well the feelings of guilt and anger that accompany something like that.

To Pierce Parker: How dare you? How dare you minimize this woman's experience by saying you "don't believe a word of it" because you feel her motivations are racial in nature? You minimize her reactions when you question why she would even consider writing about "this incident," as though it were no more than someone accidentally bumping into her. Whatever her motivation, this happened to her and she has absolutely no reason to lie about it. You are the perfect example of the blame-the-victim mentality that allows women to be raped and killed every day.

Addressing your obvious racism would take more than this letter, but I would like to know why it is "extraordinarily incomprehensible" that a White woman could accuse a Black man of "sexual misconduct." I understand that false accusations like these led to lynchings, but are you saying all accusations are unfounded? You seem not to be able to believe that things like this can be perpetrated by Black men, due only to the fact that Whites are always looking for "scapegoats for [our] racial superiority complex and depressed desires." Yes, Whites can be blamed for being racist, but so can everyone else, and don't you dare accuse this woman of lying to prove your point.

One more thing, Mr. Parker, in case you don't believe me: I have been molested by White men, and I have been raped by a Black man. Equal opportunity assault. Are you going to tell me I was overreacting to that? Can you tell me it didn't happen, because he was Black and I'm White and I was just looking for a scapegoat? Try it. You have every right to your opinions, even when they trivialize women and their experiences, but please don't burden the campus community with your ignorance. We don't need any more.

Name withheld at author's request.

Not getting a new car for graduation?

Here's the next best thing:
No money down, deferred first payment and $400 cash back from Ford Motor Company

Let's face it, not many students can count on a new car for a graduation present. But you can count on the Ford and Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program for some help. With it, there's no down payment on eligible new Ford and Mercury vehicles if you qualify and finance through Ford Credit. You may even get the benefit of a deferred 1st payment (in states where allowed). You'll also get a $400 cash incentive regardless of whether you buy or lease. You can opt to use it toward your purchase or lease, or just keep the cash.

You may qualify for the program if you earn a bachelor or advanced degree between January 1, 1993 and December 31, 1993, or are a graduate student enrolled during the same period.

Papers' fate goes to jury

Struggle between Mrs. King, BU nears end

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Lawyers for Boston University and the estate of Martin Luther King Jr. presented jurors with sharply differing interpretations Wednesday as the trial over the fate of the slain civil rights leader's papers drew to a close.

Coretta Scott King, Martin Luther King's widow, sued the university in Suffolk Superior Court seeking the return of about 83,000 documents King deposited at BU in 1964 and 1965.

Earle Cooley, a BU trustee and the university's lead attorney, asked the jury to find that BU owns the papers and that they should remain available to scholars at its Mugar Memorial Library.

But Rudolph Pierce, representing Mrs. King, asked the jury to conclude that King had changed his mind before his April 4, 1968, assassination and wanted the papers returned to the South as soon as a suitable home for them was found.

Mrs. King testified during the trial, which began April 21, that her husband had changed his mind before his death but Boston University President John Silber testified King had never told BU about that.

"This case is not about anybody lying. This case is about something both beautiful and preserving the human condition," Cooley said. Cooley said Mrs. King was remembering events that took place nearly 30 years ago.

"How easy it is to believe with your heart and soul that something is the truth because it is your desire," Cooley said.

But Pierce said Mrs. King's testimony was supported by Harry Wachtel, who represented the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in the 1960s.

In sworn written testimony, Wachtel, a New York attorney, said he asked King specifically before approaching BU in 1967 if the civil rights leader had changed his mind, and King told him that he had.

Pierce said it also was virtually impossible that the Southern Christian Leadership Conference would have set up a committee in 1966 to deal with the issue of King's papers without King knowing about it and approving it.

"There is plenty of evidence in this record that Mrs. King is telling the truth. It follows inextricably that Dr. King had changed his mind," Pierce said.

Cooley argued that a July 16, 1964 letter King signed saying the papers would become BU's "absolute property" upon King's death was a legally binding contract.

Pierce, however, said the letter was simply a declaration of King's intentions, not a contract. Pierce also argued that King had to give the papers to BU while he was alive or will them to the university. King died without a will and there was no evidence that he ever turned over ownership of the papers to the university during his lifetime, Pierce said.

When King deposited the papers within the university the letter made clear that he retained ownership of them. But the letter also expressed his intention to give them as gifts as well the sentence about BU's ownership until his death.

Cooley also argued that Mrs. King waited too long to file her suit seeking the return of the papers. The suit was filed in 1987 and Cooley said it should have been filed years earlier.

The result, Cooley said, was that witnesses who could have been helpful to BU were either dead or had cloudy recollections of events that had happened more than 25 years earlier.

But Pierce said Mrs. King didn't know for sure until a December 1985 meeting with Silber that Boston University wouldn't return the papers.

Mrs. King wants to unite all of her late husband's papers at the Martin Luther King Jr. Center For Non-Violent Social Change in Atlanta. The King Center now has most of the King papers from 1961 on.

Mrs. King, who testified last week, flew in from Atlanta to be in the courtroom for the closing arguments.

their final results, and have scored as high as 660 on previous tests.

"I think they will both make it, because they are smart kids," Calipari said. "I care more for them making it for themselves than for the team. We are going to be good next season, not very experienced, but will do fine with the players we have."

Even so, Weeks, a 6-6 power forward, would be a major help next season.

• ABC College Basketball Analyst Dick Vitale said if Weeks and Padilla pass the SAT, he will place UMass in his pre-season top 10, without them, the Minutemen are top 20.

• Philadelphia's Rasheed Wallace, a 6-11 center, shunned Temple and committed to North Carolina last month. Wallace, considered to be the nation's top recruit, also passed his SAT, and will join two other McDonald's All-Americans, forward Jerry Stackhouse and guard Jeff McInnis, in Dean Smith's freshman class next season.

spectacular variety.

"We went down to Brown last year and came out slow — I think I let in the first nine goals in about 12 shots," said a grinning LoPresti. "Today I came out here to gain a little of the pride I lost last year."

For Brown, all-time leading goal scorer Andrew Towers was impressive with three goals and one assist and Oliver Marti, the other big gun for the Bruins, added a goal and an assist.

Much credit goes to the UMass defense, led by Matt Noone and Dennis Kelley, which shut down the high-scoring Brown offense after the Bruins took an early 4-1 lead in the first half.

After Millon scored 5:43 into the first quarter for a 1-0 Gorilla lead, Brown took advantage of some sloppy play by Massachusetts and jumped to a three-goal lead. But it wasn't meant to be for Brown, as the Gorillas allowed only two goals the rest of the way.

After a brief celebration, UMass will travel to West Point, N.Y., Saturday at 1 p.m. to take on Army, the No. 11 team in the nation.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Both your mate and a close associate encourage you to take on new challenges. Setting financial questions will require careful investigation. Singles find more romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An emphasis on action motivates you to assert yourself. Organizing your home is also rewarding. Soon you will feel in good health and be able to take a trip somewhere fascinating.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Any irritation you or your partner feel can be handled sensibly, but it would help if you tool the initiative. The company of someone you respect leads to a new spiritual awareness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Speak your mind to the one you love. Avoid making accusations if you want a sympathetic hearing. Those lovers who have a private language find that it brings them closer together.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The power to do a great job is yours. You will enjoy cooperating on an important project. Someone expresses affection for you publicly. You may not be ready for a commitment, though.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Announcing the results of recent research leads to success. You think of faraway places. Have a serious money talk with the powers that be. Emphasize teamwork.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Extraordinary mental energy makes this a great day for studying and learning. You may decide to travel. Expressing resentment over old grievances could cause a clear one pain. Forgive and move on.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A work friend is grateful for recent pampering and hopes to reciprocate soon after recovery. Try to remain calm in the face of a challenge. Imagination is more important than money when choosing a gift. Find out what your partner needs and do your best to supply it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Taking care of business promptly brings peace of mind. You feel impelled to tackle new tasks. Try to be more realistic about a romantic relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Greater authority will soon be yours. Use it wisely. Your efforts to help a friend could lead to charges of favoritism. Keep all business arrangements strictly above board.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A bit of conflict in the work atmosphere need not spark animosity. Offer your services as a mediator. A budget revision helps relieve stress.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Household or community affairs capture your attention. As love grows stronger, some of you think about making a permanent commitment. Family members will applaud a decision.

Men's track does well at Brown Invite

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's track team continued their success in invitational meets with some impressive performances at last weekend's Brown Invitational Meet.

Leading the way for UMass as he has done many time before was Lyonel Benjamin, said head coach Ken O'Brien.

"Lyonel Benjamin had a terrific day," said O'Brien. "His performances were the best of his career."

Benjamin placed first in the 100 meters with a time of 10.99 seconds, and second in the 200 meters, at 22.49. He also ran the anchor leg of the 4x100 relay team joining John Johnson, Dave Miller and Tony Rachupka to finish second.

"This was a real good performance team wise," said O'Brien.

Twelve Minutemen qualified for this weekend's Eastern Conference Meet, as the lineup was narrowed as the team heads into the crunch time of the season.

The first two invitational meets at Holy Cross and Dartmouth were "experimental in nature," according to O'Brien. Different athletes were competing in different events to try to find strengths and where each athlete could help the team the most in conference competition.

With the favorable weather conditions of last weekend, the game plan was to get everybody into their best event. O'Brien described this meet as a "dress rehearsal for this weekend and next."

Once again the athletes who have been the top performers for UMass came through. Tom Galligani lost his undefeated streak in the triple jump, but finished second with a jump of 44 feet, four inches. Javelin continued to be a strength as Rich DuPuis (3rd), Paul Doyl (5th) and Mike Masone (6th) all threw well.

The middle and long distances brought success as well, with Jim Avery (5th in 800 meters), Pat Reed (6th 1500) and Kevin Greenhalgh (2nd in the 5000) all ran well.

The only thing clouding the Minutemen's successful weekend was a hamstring injury to sprinter/jumper John Johnson. He finished third in the long jump and ran the lead leg in the 4x100 meters, before going down in the 100 meters. Johnson is considered doubtful for next weekend.

The team will compete at the Eastern Conference Championships in Worcester this weekend.

Unless the Los Angeles goal-tending situation improves, Gretzky and Co. are going to have to play incredibly for L.A. to stand a chance.

Norris Division

Toronto leads St.Louis 1-0. Doug Gilmour is beginning to draw some consideration for the Conn Smythe Trophy, as his goal in the second overtime gave Toronto the series lead.

Gilmour has brought a winning attitude and work ethic to the Maple Leafs. Coach Pat Burns has openly praised Gilmour's play and leadership, touting him as the NHL's MVP.

Rookie goalie Felix Potvin was also very impressive, giving up only one goal in four plus periods.

Stay tuned, hockey fans, it's been an unpredictable post season so far and the second round promises to be interesting.

Gorillas capture N.E. Championship

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team went into Wednesday's game at Richard F. Garber field against Brown University hoping to accomplish three things: avenge, if you will, last year's 22-13 romp by Brown, clinch a playoff spot, and win the New England Championship.

Much to the delight of the Gorillas and their adoring fans, they accomplished all three by scoring seven of the last nine goals, including three late goals to break a 5-5 tie and vault UMass to an 8-6 victory, a game which the Massachusetts players dedicated to Coach Ted Garber's ailing father, Dick.

"The kids want to donate the game ball to my dad," said an emotional Ted Garber. "We were really up for this game and we'll bring it over to him at the hospital tonight."

For UMass junior midfielder Greg Kline, the victory was equally emotional.

"This is definitely a huge win for us," said an elated Kline. "We wanted to bring back the New England Championship after a couple years (Brown has won the last three). It's good to get it back."

For the majority of this game, UMass and Brown were neck-and-neck but at 8:04 of the fourth quarter, the Gorillas took control of the game when freshman Eric Bailey took a great feed from Mike Valente near the crease and fired it home for a 6-5 UMass lead. But UMass was not done.

Just 20 seconds later, senior middie Bill Edell took a feed from Kline left of the crease and Edell did the rest, firing it home for a two goal lead. Two minutes later, Mark Millon (two goals) set up another frosh, Eric Triolo for an 8-5 lead. Brown fought back three minutes later with a goal by David Evans but it was too little too late.

"They really beat us up last year and we knew we had to do it today," said Edell, who had two goals. "After a team beats you up like Brown did last year, you know you have to come back at 'em.

Despite the fact that yesterday was a team victory, much of the credit has to go to sophomore goalie Tom LoPresti, who had a whopping 20 saves, many of the Basketball schedule in 1994 toughest ever

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

When you look at the University of Massachusetts basketball schedule for next season, you may think coach John Calipari has a death wish. Calipari, who in the past has said he tries to imitate Temple, is doing just that, as he puts the finishing touches on a brutal, Owl-like, non-conference schedule.

The latest addition to the schedule is the finalization of a Feb. 6 date against Final Four participant Kentucky, to be played at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J., and aired, most likely, on ABC.

"It's a good game for us, especially because it will probably be on national television," Calipari said.

The game, a one-year contest, will be played at a neutral site because neither Kentucky coach Rick Pitino nor Calipari wanted to play on the road.

"He (Pitino) didn't want to come here and I didn't want to go to Rupp (Arena, the Wildcats' 24,000-seat home court)," Calipari said.

Calipari said he hopes to get 5,000 UMass fans to make the trip to New Jersey, which will be one of at least six nationally televised UMass games next season.

Also on the schedule is the Pre-season NIT, one of the nation's most competitive in-season tournaments, a late November road date at Oklahoma and January road games at Cincinnati and DePaul. All three games will be shown on ESPN.

UMass will host Florida State on Feb. 13 and will also play a midnight game in January, both to be aired on ESPN.

The Abdow's Hall of Fame Classic will feature Hartford, Hofstra and Maryland, which will allow UMass sophomore Donta Bright to play against his cousin and former Baltimore Dunbar teammate Keith Booth, who recently committed to the Maryland.

Calipari is also trying to arrange for the Boston University game, scheduled for Saturday, Dec. 4, to be played in the Boston Garden. The Holy Cross game, scheduled for Dec. 11, will be played in the Worcester Centrum. Home dates against Buffalo and Central Connecticut round out the schedule.

In 1994-95, Calipari is hoping to play Central Connecticut in the Hartford Civic Center, in an effort to provide a home game for Hartford natives Marcus Camby and Mike Williams. If that game comes off, it should please Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun to no end.

• Neither Philadelphia forward Tyrone Weeks nor Springfield guard Edgar Padilla have scored above the NCAA-mandated minimum of 700 on the SAT, to make them eligible for play next season. Both are awaiting their Teams fall by wayside as playoffs continue on

"Great pass. Very good. I score. Big goal. Big for team. Happy," said Maple Leaf forward Nikolai Borshcevsky after scoring the game winner in overtime to defeat the Red Wings and move the Leafs into the second round of the 1993 playoffs.

Six of the eight series in the first round of the 1993 NHL playoffs went to the underdogs. There are a lot of unfamiliar faces in the second round.

Patrick Division

Islanders and Pittsburgh are tied 1-1. The Islanders jumped out to a one-game lead in game one. After losing Mario Lemieux to back spasms after his first shift, the Penguins were not the same. Ray Ferraro and Benoit Hogue each scored a short-handed goal en route to a 3-2 Islander victory.

CROSSCHECKS By Matt Vautour

The win is particularly impressive for the Islanders, who are without top gun Pierre Turgeon. Turgeon is sidelined with a separated shoulder, courtesy of a Dale Hunter cheap shot. Turgeon was celebrating a goal when he was blind-sided by an angry Hunter. He is expected to miss at least all of the Patrick Division finals. If a cheap shot hall of fame was established, Dale Hunter would be a founding member.

The Penguins rebounded in game 2 as they rode the hot hand of Tom Barasso to a 3-0 win. Rick Tocchet, Ron Francis, and Joe Mullen all scored for the Pens. The series moves to New York for games three and four.

Adams Division

Montreal leads Buffalo 2-0. Patrick Roy has returned to the brilliance that earned him the nickname St. Patrick, turning back 35 Buffalo shots to seal the Canadians 4-3 victory.

The Canadians 4-3 win in game two in overtime tied an NHL record as 16 games this year went to the extra period. Guy Carbonneau scored the winner.

The Habs, who struggled toward the end of the season and in the first two playoff games against Quebec, have been flying high lately. Vincent Damphouse, Brian Bellows and Kirk Muller all seem to have found their scoring touches.

If the Habs offense stays productive and Roy plays up to form, the Canadians could be poised for a run for the cup. If LaFontaine and Mogilny start to heat up, and Grant Fuhr plays as well as he did against Boston, the Sabres are far from out of it.

Smythe Division

Vancouver leads Los Angeles 1-0. With the toppling of the Red Wings and Blackhawks, the Vancouver Canucks find themselves the favorites to win the Campbell Conference and go to the Stanley Cup finals.

In the 5-2 win over the Kings in game one, the Canucks had their game in high gear, putting the game out of reach with a three goal first period outburst.

Los Angeles goalie Robb Stauber, who was very impressive in the first round series win over Calgary, was weak in game

Underdogs in first? Wait till Independence Day

Grow up, Deion Sanders.

Pittsburgh's Tim Wakefield throws 35 BBs in 39 IP - hey that's already as much last year. I smell a fish (fluke) about last season.

Detroit, Philadelphia, San Francisco and California are still in the first division? Hate to use the cliche, but check the standings on July 4, then start talking pennant - until then, enjoy the ride - and that includes Boston.

Frank Viola sprains his ankle on Monday, but vows he'll start on Saturday. Viola has NEVER missed a start in his career - researchers are working on whether he's got the record for pitchers.

Word is around the league that Jack Morris has been tipping his pitches. Well, it's either that or the overrated tag he's had since last season is proving its worth.

Understatement Dept.: Chicago's Jack McDowell, 5-0 in the month of April with a 4.33 ERA, says "I'm getting some help." Hey, when your teammates can score close to 7 runs when you pitch, who needs to careful?

Best Quote: David Cone, after Kansas City Royals manager Hal McRae throws a tantrum: "Thank you all for making me feel completely at home."

This reporter couldn't verify rumors that Danny Darwin has been kidnapped and replaced by the BoSox BP pitcher.

How much of a sports whore am I? I bag on Kirk Gibson both for the Collegian and for the Ware River News, and then I take him for my rotisserie league team.

George Brett says he's considering retiring at the end of the season ? Hitting .222 wouldn't have anything to do with that decision, would it?

Jose Canseco, hitting .297 with 5 HRs and 26 RBIs, claims he's not really hitting the ball all that well yet. Is it conceit? or does Jose know something we don't?

Bobby Kelly or Roberto Kelly? Only his mommy knows for sure.

Watchout tradehawks, Bruce Hurst is on rehab assignment.

Well, that's all for this week - and for my career here at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. Both Jeff Hojlo and I are graduating.

Digable Planets perform a jazzy, diverse show

By CALEB COCHRAN
Collegian Staff

Digable Planets
Pearl Street
May 2, 1993

It was coming up on 11:30 Sunday night, and the crowd at Pearl Street was getting irritated. After standing through a long and mediocre set from D-Influence, the fans were now being treated to an incredibly long intermission during which the temperature soared to nearly intolerable heights. There was only one cure for the blues of this antsy crowd, and rap trio Digable Planets knew exactly what it was.

After coming on stage to a roaring ovation, the Planets broke into "It's Good to be Here," the first song from their debut album, Reachin' (a new refutation of time & space). It was clear from the start of the show that the Planets had no intention of rapping in the mellow and relaxing formula that characterizes their album. Instead, the group went full-throttle from the very beginning, rhyming with intensity reminiscent of the Beastie Boys and 3rd Bass. This style worked very well for the Planets, who showed a great deal of stage savvy for such an inexperienced group.

After the opening tune, the two-man, one-woman trio pumped the crowd into a frenzy with tracks such as "Time and Space (a new refutation of)," and "Jimmi Diggin' Cats." Group founder and lead vocalist Butterfly performed a stirring, jazz-backed rendition of "La Femme Fetal," a story about a friend's abortion situation which got a raging response from the pro-choicers in the audience. The group's taste for jazz was evident throughout the show, especially in performing the tune "Nickel Bags." In the original version, the chorus speaks of "nickel bags of funk." In their live version, however, the line was amended to "nickel bags of jazz."

Some of the more mellow tunes from Reachin' were rapped with extra enthusiasm, especially "Swoon Units," "Escapism' (Gettin' Free)," and "What Cool Breezes Do," which encouraged the crowd to "Do what you feel." All of these songs seemed even better and more passionate live than they do on the Planets exceptional debut album.

The evening came to a close with the group's first hit single, "Rebirth of Slick (Cool Like Dat)," after which the Planets tossed buckets of water on the overheated crowd. The Planets rapped "Cool Like Dat" in the same skillful and powerful manner that characterized their evening at Pearl Street. The exhausted crowd mustered up enough energy to jump around, House of Pain style, in appreciation of this instant classic.

Going into Sunday night's show, I expected a skillful yet mellow demonstration of careful rap executed in the same laid-back manner which prevails on Reachin'. The concert turned out to be much more than that. Digable Planets pulled out all the stops, rhyming hard, rhyming slow, rhyming to jazz accompaniment, and just plain rappin', in, as Butterfly put it, "the old school way." In winning over the crowd with their delightful mix of hip-hop and jazz, Digable Planets proved that they are more than "Cool Like Dat." They are for real.

Well-acted Heirs proves banal

By EDWARD W. HUMPHRIES
Collegian Staff

British comedies have always been a strange lot in the United States. In a country where few international films ever truly gel with the movie-going populace (witness the struggle for a film like the French import Indochine to hold water against an abysmal Indecent Proposal), it's surprising that the dry English humor-driven vehicles have had the success they've had in the dominating American market. The Monty Python films have certainly garnered their massive cu'+ followings here in the New World and the insanely funny A Fish Called Wanda has earned its fair share of laughs. And that's the precise reason why Python vet Eric Idle's new film Splitting Heirs is such a curious arrival.

Idle has certainly labored over this disappointingly mediocre comedy, grabbing the reins as executive producer, screenwriter and lead actor. The problem is he and director Robert Young opt for the more obvious sophomoric stab and leave the more sophisticated comedic attempts under-exploited.

Idle even attempts to further enamor the surprisingly big audiences garnered by 1989's Wanda by pulling the same trick out of his sleeve as that far superior comedy, assembling a mixed cast of British and American personalities including Rick Moranis, Barbara Hershey and Python god John Cleese (who's humorously listed in the credits as "and introducing John Cleese.") But its "much ado about nothing" if the comedy doesn't excel and in this case, as the redneck expression goes, "this dog don't hunt."

Associated Press
Barbara Hershey

The story itself has an interesting premise, rich with comedic potential. Lost at birth by a '60s-saturated Duke and Duchess of Bornmouth, the infant heir to the dukedom throne is soon returned to the Duke and Duchess. Thirty-odd years later, Rick Moranis appears as Henry, the supposed heir to the crown whose American heritage is explained by having spent his youth in New York boarding schools. But it's Tim Patel (Idle) who realizes that he may be the true heir to the crown due to a similar childhood incident, and after a run-in with gleefully sadistic lawyer Raoul P. Shadgrind (John Cleese) he comes to realize that he is the true Bornmouth baby. What follows is a variation on the Lawrence Kasdan comedy I Love You to Death and the myth of Rasputin, with Idle desperately trying to off the resilient Moranis so as to achieve his proper heirs.

The problem therefore lies in the script. Idle seems to know the inroads to dark comedy well and he lays them out dutifully, but more often he allows the sexual innuendos and dumb double entendres to stand in the way of the true comic situations. Whenever he feels the comedy is bogging down (which must be a lot), he resorts to trotting out Barbara Hershey in American sex-kitten mode or British Sadie Frost (Dracula) to vamp her way out, thus aiming for the more obvious jokes and unfortunately allowing clever situations to subside.

Young's direction is capable and can't be faulted, and the talented cast certainly labors through the material hoping for a diamond in the rough. What's unearthed

Associated Press
John Cleese

are brief glimmering specks of comic brilliance that unfortunately lose their luster. Even Cleese can't command the audience's attention, though he tries his damnedest. He's obviously modeled loosely on the maniacal Kevin Kline character in A Fish Called Wanda and is given the best material as a quasi-stalker aimed at trying to land Idle the throne through various assassination attempts on Moranis' life. Unfortunately this quickly runs tiresome and a quick bit involving Cleese's failed attempt to blow up a baby is just plain disturbing, eking out few laughs.

To the film's credit, it is a gorgeously filmed comedy, with Oscar nominated cinematographer Tony Pierce-Roberts (Howards End) capturing the lush greens of the English countryside and the grainy grandeur of the local castles with great finesse. Most of the comedies today skimp on the inherent essence of film, the photography, but Roberts has clearly proven his hand at orchestrating the camera's eye and makes this a wonderful film to look at . . . if only the comedy had been equally as marvelous. Idles's film is a mixed bag boasting exuberant performances, but ultimately it fails (and I'd hate to seem like I'm pulling hairs) due to a script mired in the obvious.

Campus Man goes Hollywood

As soon as the phone call came I grabbed all my things and had a friend drive me to Bradley International Airport in Connecticut, the drive-through state. Being told by my agent less than an hour after lunch that I got a lead part in a major film starring Tori Spelling and Robert DeNiro made me start to shvitz.

Adam Scott
ROBERTS

Warner Brothers had booked me a round-trip ticket to LAX in first class. Immediately, I became demanding of the stewardess and told her that I asked for a San Peligrino, not an Evian, and that she best rectify the situation immediately! Couldn't she tell that she was dealing with Adam Scott Roberts, also known as ASR?

Anyhow, I was really excited about this trip. I was told not to tell my friends or fraternity brothers until after I had signed the contract. Since my film credits only include bit parts in Housesitter and A League of their Own and a guest spot on Fox's Class of '96, I wouldn't get paid an astronomical sum but hey, look at Sharon Stone. She starred in Basic Instinct for bubkus and now she's the hottest actress in Corruptown, I mean Tinseltown, and making as much as $9 million per film.

Only in Hollywood can you be a nobody on Friday and comes Saturday everyone knows your name. I'll admit that having good connections had a lot to do with me getting the part. My friend from Beverly Hills, who works at Warners, pitched my name to director Oliver Stone. Then Tori met with my agent Michael Ovitz and decided to sign on.

The second I met Tori, I was

Listen To This: Tunes for cranking

By KEN MAIURI
Collegian Staff

The weather is getting better, so if you want some great pop music to play out your dorm window, in your car, or on your Walkman really loud, give the following a try!

Frosting On the Beater
The Posies
DGC

Buy this. It's the Posies' third disc (second for a major label) and they've dropped the dated '60s motifs (flanged voices, everything draped in echo, etc.) and defined their sound. And it's damn good. Guitars roar and squeal while steering clear of grunge, punk and any other musical category — it's simply loud pop music with a vengeance.

Ken Stringfellow and Jon Auer's voices blend and harmonize over the churning guitars in great songs like "Solar Sister," "Flavor of the Month" and "When Mute Tongues Can Speak"; these are just random examples — not one of the disc's 12 tracks is filler. A definite improvement on their previous sound, Frosting On the Beater is a great disc that deserves to be heard. What are you waiting for? A+

New Wave
The Auteurs
Caroline Records

On first listen, this debut disc from the three-member Auteurs sounds, well, boring. The songs blend together into a drab wash of acoustic guitars, bass, piano and drums. Given a chance, though, the songs begin to differentiate themselves and grow on you. Of the 12 relaxed pop songs, "Bailed Out," "Don't Trust the Stars" and "Early Years" stand out from the rest.

The only real drawback for the Auteurs is the voice of Luke Haines, the lead singer. It's a breathy, whispered English sneer, too high pitched and nasal to be enjoyable for an entire album at one sitting. More often than not, the songs overpower the dull vocals. It's worth a listen. B+

Ruby Ranch
The Vestrymen
Vertebrae Records

I saw these guys open up for Robyn Hitchcock at the Bluewall back in 1989 — they were loud, powerful and they "rocked," if I may use such a term. Then I bought their first album and was disappointed in the lazy acoustic sound of the disc. Where was the uptempo stuff?

Fortunately their new disc, Ruby Ranch, comes roaring out of the starting gate with its loud, catchy opening track, "3 Kings." Unfortunately, the rest of the album doesn't keep up the same energy level. Regardless the disc holds up well; songs like "Oldsmobile," "Box of Pictures" and "Backyard" are enjoyable, despite the occasionally weak lead vocals. An enjoyable album from a great local band. See them live! B

Plants and Birds and Rocks and Things
The Loud Family
Alias Records

This is a great disc. Nineteen pop songs that range from arty experiments to straightforward rock, with a couple short tracks that are a little of both — like "The Ballad of How You Can All Shut Up," for example. It begins with a loud synthesizer hum, which is broken off by a distorted, backwards voice that engages in a call-and-response dialogue with

Inspired new Lenny Kravitz a sweet treat

By CALEB COCHRAN

Are You Gonna Go My Way
Lenny Kravitz
Virgin

We've all heard the cliche, "The third time's a charm." For Lenny Kravitz, this phrase could not be more true. With his third release, Are You Gonna Go My Way, Kravitz has finally hit paydirt.

The album begins with the title track, a hard and fast rock 'n' roller which is both powerful and irresistibly catchy. Skillful guitar work and a splendid chorus make this tune a great opener. A fantastic instrumental about two thirds of the way through adds to the song's intensity.

The album's second tune is "Believe," a dreamy and inspirational selection with a soft and delightful chorus which encourages listeners to "Believe in yourself." Portions of the song vividly recall the Beatles' "Hey Jude."

Another worthy cut is the album's third song, "Come on and Love Me." The gentle vocals of Kravitz contrast nicely against a strong drum beat throughout the tune.

The album's second hard rocker, "Is There Any Love in Your Heart," begins with a yell from Kravitz which is sure to remind listeners of '70s rock icon Robert Plant in his Led Zeppelin days. The song soon progresses into a scathing attack on a would-be lover which includes some colorful lyrics about the woman's infidelity.

A pair of slow and mellow tunes which showcase the creative diversity of Kravitz are "Heaven Help" and "Sugar." "Heaven Help" is a smooth and relaxing track which highlights the vocal skill of

Spring Concert '93

Hip-hop hooray for NBN, rap's bad boys

Naughty by Nature

COURTESY KRISTINE LARSEN

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

UMass, let's give it up for Naughty by Nature!

The 1993 Spring Concert will prove to be naughty, indeed, as the hip hop bad boys from East Orange, N.J., plan to entertain the University of Massachusetts.

Naughty by Nature, made up of members Treach (Anthony Criss, 22), Vinnie (Vincent Brown, 22), and DJ KG (Kier Gist, 23) are fresh off the release of their second album titled 19 Naughty III. The disc has already yielded "Hip Hop Hooray," a Top Ten pop hit on the Billboard Hot 100, which has become synonymous across these United States with partying.

The group seems to have a knack for recording party anthems for the youth of today. In the summer of 1991, the group released their first single which has sold over one million copies, "O.P.P." The song was an instant hit and laid the groundwork for the following these rappers now have.

"Hip Hop Hooray" is now as popular as "O.P.P." ever was, and Treach, who is known for carrying his trademark machete or chainsaw, said the song is supposed to give back to the rappers who inspired Naughty by Nature.

"'Hip Hop Hooray' is about givin' props to the rappers who came before us, who inspired us," he said. "It's thankin' them for the hard work they've done, carving ways and paths for us that make it easier for us to enjoy our success now."

Naughty by Nature originally released a song entitled "Ghetto Bastard" after "O.P.P." hit it big, but the group felt that the title was "a little too hard for radio." So, the same song was renamed "Everything's Gonna Be Alright," and found as much success as their first hit.

"'O.P.P.' was a party song. 'Everything's Gonna Be Alright' is what happened before 'O.P.P.' — what made us what we are now and what we had to go through," Treach said.

"Everything's Gonna Be Alright" details what Treach, Vinnie and KG went through growing up in the hood. The song also describes some of the problems both Treach and Vinnie faced because they came from single-parent homes.

"Two parents is definitely how a child should be raised," said Treach. "If they're not together, they at least should make time for the kid."

The movie soundtrack from Juice produced the group's next anthem, appropriately titled "Uptown Anthem." For all of their trademark fight songs, Naughty by Nature has some great songs that never really hit it big, but are just as good, and some are even better than the group's hits.

"Thankx for Sleepwalking" has to be the best song on the first disc, with the typical Naughty by Nature exchange in the beginning between Vinnie and Treach, then a kickin' beat that is just made for crankin' the stereo.

Naughty by Nature is touring nationally already, and their stop in Amherst should be as loud and naughty as ever.

"We're more spontaneous now," said Vinnie. "We want to make sure our fans get what they want. They know they're comin' for a show and they know they're definitely gonna get a show."

Woodstock legend an acoustic master

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

It is altogether fitting that folk singer Richie Havens is playing the 1993 Spring Concert. First of all 'Havens graced UMass with his presence at the ' st ever UMass Spring Concert. His inclusion on the bill makes for a nice historical link.

Second, consider the similarities between Spring Co icert and another show Havens played some 24 years ago, one that made him famous: an outdoor festival on a temporary stage, in the middle of a muddy field filled with college-aged youth — the 1969 Woodstock Music and Arts Festival, which gave birth to great quotes like "The New State Thruway's closed, man" and made folks like Wavy Gravy inexplicably famous.

Havens will always be identified with the three-day counterculture fest that is still considered the defining moment of the late '60s. His stirring performance is considered a Woodstock highlight, along with Joe Cocker, Jimi Hendrix and Sly and the Family Stone. But unlike those '60s icons, Havens was a relative unknown before he went They've established themselves in the Valley, gained the affection of UMass coffeehouse-goers and beat out four other bands in the Five Alive contest to win their opening band status. Not bad for a bunch of Bastards.

The Canine Bastards, despite their success of late, have chosen to keep their identities and backgrounds pretty much under wraps. Thanks to a Collegian interview with the fivesome this winter, at least a little information could be found about the band.

"We all went to St. John's Prep together in Boston, except for (bassist Peter) Bones. Bones went to Andover High," the Bastards told the Collegian's Cutter Garcia. Technically that would make the Bastards a Boston band. Nevertheless, with three of its members attending UMass, this Boston band has gained prominence as Valley artists.

The Canine Bastards describe themselves as "going for that 'gimmicky' thing" and rightfully so. Replete with matching shades and outfits at last month's Five Alive show, the Bastards gained the ire of a few but the affection of far more.

Theirs was a set of slick dance moves and pure energy which perhaps purposefully served as an entertaining mask for the band's occasionally dissonant musical stylings. But it is this dissonance and how it complements the stage show which gives the Bastards such widespread appeal.

Lead vocalist Butterfly Styles (yes, it's a stage name) has a whining and sometimes grating tone which nonetheless enhances the Bastards' stage presence. Styles' singing style is quite representative of the entire Bastards sound. They live by the motto, "Naked and loud, vacant and proud," and make no excuses for their playful tunes.

"We like to entertain," the Bastards told the Collegian. "We like to make sure that people are enjoying themselves when they come and see us."

Enjoying oneself is almost a given at a Bastards show. For even if their musical style may come into question, there is little doubt the Canine Bastards are first-rate entertainers. Their dance moves are slick and precise, outfits often absurd (they played a Butterfield coffeehouse in only their briefs) and characters strong.

The Campus Pond stage will no doubt be the biggest arena the band has played of yet. But fear not and show up on time. The Bastards are sure to put on their greatest production yet.

Dinosaur Jr. are definitive Valley sound

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

If ever a band should be a mainstay in the Spring Concert lineup, it'd have to be Dinosaur Jr. It's a fair assumption that Dino is the most successful band to ever emerge from the now dense Valley music scene. Granted, the Pixies achieved international status, but you'd be hard-pressed to get them to admit they're a Valley band. When one thinks Amherst/NoHo music, one thinks Dinosaur Jr.

Dino vocalist/guitarist/frontman J. Mascis has been one of the more talked about personalities in music as of late. Some writers act as if they're only discovering his eccentricities and propensity for unusual behavior. Valley mainstays know better. The former drum star of the Amherst Regional youth orchestra is now considered by many a "guitar god."

Mascis' ties to UMass also run deep. When offered a spot in the UMass drum corps, Mascis declined. "The hats may be nice," said Mascis. "But there was no way I was gonna sit on the sidelines, freezing my ass off at a bunch of stupid ballgames."

Mascis instead elected to participate in a number of bands such as Deep Wound before forming Dinosaur Jr. The impact of Dino has been felt worldwide.

While it has existed more as an underground success than anything else for years, only of late has Dino been assimilated into the mainstream along with countless other "indie" bands. Albums and singles to their credit are extensive, with their latest, Where You Been, already proving to be the most successful thanks in part to MTV and mega-publicity.

Thankfully this flood of promotion has caused Mascis and Dinosaur Jr. to sacrifice little if none of the sonic disarray which gained them critical and underground attention.

While the formula may have been polished and smoothed since the days of Dino's early singles and seven-inches, Mascis continues to coat Dino's grungy yet melodic backdrop with whiney tormented vocals.

Mascis possesses one of the most inimitable styles in the industry. No one, and I mean no one, can wail about about grief and rejection with the pathetic vigor of Mascis. This particular style of miserable warbling has alone been what attracted the band such a devoted following.

One of Dino's biggest fans is noted actor Matt Dillon. Dillon even went so far as to direct the band's "Get Me" video in an effort to just be a part of the whole Dino thing. "We're his favorite band, man," says Mascis. "He just wanted to make contact." Ironically enough, the video depicts a funner Dino as the band is pelted by leaf-throwing juvenile delinquents.

Mascis, traveling unintentionally incognito as always, is a frequent viewer at Valley area shows of such bands as buddy Charlie Nakajima's Gobblehoof and ex-Dino member Lou Barlow's Sebadoh. He assimilates his six-foot plus frame with his surroundings easily. That's just the type of guy Mascis is — tall, weird and solemn.

So why does Dino Jr. have such a big and booming approach to music? This mystery need not be uncovered. Rather one should just appreciate J Mascis' tormented soul and its conversion to sound.

Note to the audience: All good Dinosaur Jr. sets include their riotous cover of the Cure's "Just Like Heaven." If it doesn't show up in their regular set, demand it in the encore.

Marley's rich legacy lives on

The Wailers

If questioned about the reggae group the Wailers, the response most people would give would be, "Oh, Bob Marley's old band, right?" Although the group reached its highest popularity during the '70s with the late Marley, the reggae demi-god, at the helm, there is much more to this eight-person group than just the reputation of their former leader.

The Wailers began back in 1967, when Marley, Peter Tosh and Bunny Wailer decided to form a vocal group modeled after U.S. doo-wop groups popular at this time. They recruited one of Jamaica's best known reggae bands, then known as the Upsetters, to play backup for them.

Later, in the '70s, several members of the group left and new members joined. This group, headed by Bob Marley, became known as Bob Marley and the Wailers. During this decade, the band thrust itself into the mainstream music circuit, creating timeless reggae hits while changing the face of popular music forever.

Marley, unfortunately, passed away in 1981. Before he death, however, he took aside two of the oldest and present members of the Wailers, Junior Marvin and Aston "Family Man" Barrett, and asked them to make a promise. As Marvin recalled, "Right before Bob died, he said 'Please keep the band together and concentrate on the quality of the songs.' So we began on the foundations we set up to

Rageful tunes, ferocious fire from Quicksand

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

The sixth and finai addition to the Spring Concert lineup quite by accident has become the frequent focus of this writer. New York modern-day hardcore quartet Quicksand has made the East Coast their stomping ground as of late and rightfully so.

The Quicksand formula of frustration, power chords, intense screaming and overall rage is highly compatible with the East Coast way of life. Their latest Polygram release Slip has been a frequent passenger in my Civic's tape deck as I irritably make my way through the congested streets of Boston.

"I'd say it's definitely high energy," said lead singer/guitarist Walter Schreifels beneath his mom-style bowl-cut in a recent interview. "I think [Slip is] real emoted kind of music. I'm screaming my head off through most of the record."

Schreifels, a veteran of NYC hardcore mongers, Gorilla Biscuits, is in actuality a peaceful young man. He speaks with a certain animated vigor but reflects in speech little of the vocal fire he and his bandmates emit on stage.

With the release of their self-titled 1991 EP, Quicksand accrued a substantial following in various U.S. and European areas while selling 20,000 copies. After touring with fellow ragers Helmet, the band finished up Slip.

The hectic and intense release features a collage of

A historical perspective on the Spring Concert

By BRIAN BABINEAU
Collegian Staff

While most of us are concerned with the Spring Concert present, there is time one must set aside to think about Spring Concerts past. This looking back not only gives us a historical viewpoint of the event which we are preparing to partake, but may give us a thought or two to help us enjoy the annual May musical menagerie all that much more. Then again, maybe you might just get a kick out of it.

For all of you who are concerned with the lack of headlining talent here this year, and are wondering where the Black Crowes or Pearl Jam are, this historical piece begins by presenting a few concert lineups that should make you feel much better about our present presentation.

In 1987, the stellar semblance of talent began with Lonnie Mack, continued with the Jon Butcher Axis, and culminated with the incredible Cabo Frio. (Yes, they really played here. Wow.) Or how about the 1984 gathering of groups that was rivaled only by Live Aid.

Spring Concert Preview

That tuneful troop included such international biggies as The Persuasions (they're huge in Belgium), Michael Gregory, Utopia (they sell out in Turkey consistently) and the headliner Spiro Gyra. Or is that Spyro Gira?

In 1983, the concert seemed to be themed "Musicans with Really Cool Names," as Melba Moore, Edgar Winter, Nona Hendryx and Gary U.S. Bonds graced the grass next to the pond. Now, if those line-ups don't make you see this Sunday's event differently, then I don't know what will. (No disrespect intended to all of you Cabo Frio fans out there.)

Of course, we should just hope that all of our acts make it here. In 1990, Queen Latifah was accidentally taken to Amherst, New York, rather than our little village in the Valley. She eventually made it here, and fortunately performed, unlike when concertgoers were cheated out of a chance to see De La Soul in 1991, when some state troopers decided to detain them in Connecticut for an undue amount of time.

Of course, you never really know when one of the relatively unknown acts that participate is going to hit it big in a few years, and become someone you can say, "Yeah, I saw them back in the day" about, as you pop

In your interest: A list of items needed for show

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

Hopefully you've had a chance to peruse the stringent list of rules and restrictions for this year's Spring Concert. After perusing the guidelines, you may have come to the conclusion that you will have no fun. Despite the fact you cannot bring your own food and beverages, do not let this detract from your fun.

Here's a list of some of items you can bring. And remember: while anything can double as a "..ying projectile," only you can can regulate its flight.

1) Towel(s) — This is mandatory. It's just not as fun to plonk your buttocks on the naked earth. A towel can not only keep your pupa clean, but can also make a fashion statement. I'd suggest a full-size beach towel depicting either Punchy the Hawaiian Punch guy or your favorite Looney Tunes character (I've always been a fan of Woody Woodpecker).

2) Earplugs — Just in case one of the bands doesn't capture your fancy.

3) Pen and Paper — You never know what famous faces are going to show up for the annual event. With Mr. Bic and a pad of paper you'll be ready to get autographs of your favorite performers. Also great for getting phone numbers of your friends and interests for the summer months ahead.

4) Your valid student ID — This is your admission ticket. Won't you feel silly if you have to reclimb Orchard or Sylvan hill to retrieve that ugly picture while your friends are bopping along to the Canine Bastards.

5) Sunglasses/shades — Whatever your preference, be it Oakleys, Ray Bans or those little round John Lennon shades with the funky colors. Sunglasses are stylish (usually), functional and prevent harmful ultraviolet rays from burning out your corneas and bringing about the need for costly surgery or even loss of sight.

6) Suntan lotion/Sunscreen — There should be sun. Pray for it. When there's sun, you need to protect yourself from harmful rays which can burn you and ultimately lead to skin cancer and costly surgery. An SPF of at least 15 is recommended.

7) Alluring yet functional clothing — If you've been working on increasing those pecs and firming those buttocks, now's the time to show 'em. Just remember, you are not on stage and are expected to applaud politely even if you envision yourself as more important than the performers.

And finally. . .

8) Your undying enthusiasm — Keep in mind the Valley's biggest yearly concert is free for all UMass students. By staying moderately sober and behaving ourselves, we can have a world of fun.

Behind the scenes with UPC

Jon Lupo interviews the Spring Concert's organizer

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

When most people think of Spring Concert, they think of the bands and the afternoon of entertainment and music. What people may not think of is how Spring Concert is put together. I spoke with Jen Jubenville, promotions director for Union Program Council, about how this mammoth production is planned and executed.

When does planning begin for Spring Concert?

Planning is basically always in the works — even from the beginning of the year. That's because everything we do throughout the year is practice for Spring Concert, since it's such a large event. It's hard to say when planning begins exactly because it depends on when we get the bands confirmed. A lot of it comes off the [bands'] contracts, like for hospitality, what they need in terms of food and dressing rooms, stage, equipment.

Spring Concert Preview

How many people work on the UPC staff for the concert and how many volunteers do you have?

There are 12 members of staff, but we have four staff members returning next year and eight new members, so we have 20 staff members working all together. We need about 100 security volunteers alone and then between stage crew and hospitality, there's probably 200 people.

It's easier to get hospitality and stage crew set up, but we have a lot of problems finding people for security because there's a stigma attached to it — people think 'oh, that means I'm going to have to be an authority and I can't have fun' — but that's not what it is about at all.

Without security, the show can't go on. In fact, we've been advised by University adminstration that without more security, Spring Concert will be cancelled. We need about 100 more people, so go to the UPC office in the Student Union or call 545-2892 by Friday at the latest. Besides, you get a free lunch and T-shirt.

How do bands get chosen and when do you start the process?

We start, ideally, a month or a month and a half before a date, but it's not always that easy. For example, last year the Beastie Boys were not confirmed until two weeks before the show. Band choosing depends on a lot of factors. We do polling — surveys within our own general community and surveys within the campus. Finding out who's popular through rumors, Billboard, who's getting a lot of airplay on local radio, etc. So, of course, a band like Pearl Jam we could never get now because they're so expensive. It depends on popularity in the area and availability.

That's really important. It's what happened with Living Colour — we were thinking of having them for a headliner — but they were in Arizona on May 8 and feasibly we could've flown them in that night for the show on Sunday, but we would've had to have flown them out that night to the next place on their tour.

It also depends on how much the band costs. We also have a multicultural requirement in our constitution that's very important to us. There's about 20,000 people on our campus and everybody has different tastes.

This year's concert line-up seems to be more diverse, where in the past the focus has been mainly on alternative music. Was this a conscious decision?

For some it was real conscious, but for others it wasn't that conscious because it's what the community wants. It wasn't like 'oh, we have to change.' The whole thing was a large conflict among us. We are a college production company and shouldn't we play college music — but what is college music? Is it necessarily alternative or rock or anything else? We get money from everybody, from the student activities fee and we get a portion of it. The money doesn't have personal taste.

Was there any talk of scrapping the multi-act format and just going for one big headliner?

No. We like the multi-act format. It's just such a large event that I think it would be a shame to do that, to reduce it something we do throughout the year anyway. It also doesn't represent everybody. I'm sure we could get a "better" headliner, but still, the headliners we have now — Dinosaur Jr. and Naughty By Nature — are still good. Spring Concert goes under festival billing, so technically there is no headliner, just one band who happens to play last, who would be a good finisher.

You mentioned Living Colour as a band you were pursuing for the concert. What other bands did you put out offers for?

We probably put out about 20 bids for headliners alone. Black Crowes — we tried so hard. Others include Nine Inch Nails, Lenny Kravitz, 10,000 Maniacs, Sugar and a bunch of others. We don't want the University to think that these are the bands we had in mind the whole time and that this is what we 'ended up' with. I feel that's what a lot of people think — 'why can't it be like last year,' but I think that's what people will be saying next year. In the wake of all the rumors and talk, this line-up seemed relatively minor, but it isn't. All of the acts are truly extraordinary.

This Melon is definitely ripe for the listening

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

COURTESY HEATHER DEVLIN

With only one album in hand, Blind Melon have drawn comparisons to a broad array of acts, from the Allman Brothers to Jane's Addiction.

The music of Blind Melon is an uncanny amalgam of classic rock and harmony with a modern "alternative" twist. In concert the band exhibits the talent to break into prolonged jams or merely end the song as on the album, whatever the musicians please. Blind Melon's almost a throwback, in quite stark contrast to Guns n' Roses whom the band is opening for on the current link of their tour (which unfortunately passed over Amherst once again).

I recently chatted with Blind Melon lead singer Shannon Hoon (a.k.a. the guy in the "Don't Cry" video) on the album, the tour and yes, even Axl himself.

How would you describe Blind Melon the album to someone who's never heard it?

It's a collage of moods. We try to make songs that enhance different moods different people have.

Do you try to tell stories with the songs?

A few of the songs are like that. But most of the songs are ambiguous to leave the listeners to have their part in the song. The meanings of the songs kind of change to me night after night. It gets monotonous to do the same story.

Like "Dear Ol' Dad" for example. The consensus among my friends seems to be that it's about incest. Am I reading too much into it?

There's parts of it that are dealing with incest and religion. Like I said, it's a collage of different moods. "Holy Man" bases itself around one certain thing but it's written in a way you can get a feel for a lot of different (moods).

With all these great tracks, how did you decide on "I Wonder" and "Tones of Home" as singles?

That was a difficult thing. I can't pick my favorite song off the record. If I had my way about it, I would like to release every one of them. "Tones of Home" was a song that would appeal to a majority of the population listening to new music because it deals with peer pressure and change and when you leave your home and find out what people's points of view may turn into. A lot of people have to deal with leaving the nest and coming back to show what you've accomplished. It's what's best for you as the individual and everybody has to deal with that.

So is there a certain amount of personal experience here?

There's personal experiences in all the songs. Some songs are taken from other people's points of view. I like putting myself in other people's shoes and seeing what they're view's all about. If they've got a valid point of view and it's looked at with conviction then you have to place yourself in their position to understand more. Brad [Smith, bassist] writes a lot of the lyrics, so him and I work together in a lot of them.

Without getting into the question of influences too deeply, I think if I were to compare you to any band it'd be the Allmans.

You know I never really was a big Allman Brothers listening to guy, but obviously I've been engulfed with the Allman Brothers from a few of the guys. Everybody likes to jam. I imagine if I listened to the Allman Brothers, I would like them because I know that the guys in our band go off on just jams. In the middle of the song all the time, they just go off and it's fun because they kind of create this little sandbox for me to get down and play in. And it's a good thing, it doesn't make it monotonous for anybody who does know the record. They get to hear different versions of different songs on any given night. We record every show so that we can hear what we did cos' sometimes we don't do the same things twice and sometimes the jams are fun to go back and listen to.

What's the mood of the band on stage?

it changes with the moods of the songs. You can tell if the jam is turning into a very moody thing. Sometimes it gets so moody that I don't even like to try to participate in it. I just like to sit down right in the middle of the stage and just think. You just let yourself go and let your mind take a walk.

Your music seems to walk a much higher road than a lot of the grunge and pop today. Where do you think it fits in today's alternative market?

I don't. We're not trying to conform to any kind of certain market. In the business world it may be killing us. We never got into a band to appeal to a business as opposed to just feeling good. And feeling good is what we try to maintain. I think there's a lot of people out there who want to listen. The mood and the impact of what a mood can create is a lot higher to me than appealing to a mass majority or a big market.

Do you think it's possible for today's public to appreciate the kind of musicianship that you do or is it more a trait of times gone by?

Some people are just into lyrics, some people are just into musicianship. I think that good musicians can appreciate the musicianship in our band. It's funny cos' you get the big mix at our shows. You have the groovers, the people who love to find the groove and just move their body to the groove. And we have the slam dancers.

You get those at any show.

Yeah, it's funny to see people moshing to "No Rain," that really lets me know they're listening. It's all right if it's done because the music's taking you away. But when I see people slamming to "No Rain," it just lets me know. There are parts of songs when it's appropriate, but it's not appropriate the whole show. That's honestly when those people I just wish would leave. Because it's making it hell for everybody else who's wanting to listen. When the venue's big enough that when people want to just groove can move to the song and still see the show and enjoy the show, that's all right.

We just played the Wetlands in New York and the place was just packed elbow to elbow. They oversold the club and everybody started moshing and it just made it miserable for the people. People who come on the road with us and travel hours and hours and they come to the show and I see them one by one some of them get taken out because they get kicked in the head.

I read in your bio that you do things like somersault off the stage. Do you think that encourages the crowd to be more restless?

The only time I participate is when there's room for everybody to be comfortable. Everybody has their zone and they can do their own thing. I don't want to try to limit anybody in any manner at all. When I find the time and the place, I love to mix it up.

Tell me about your affiliation with Guns N' Roses.

I'm from the same hometown as Axl (Rose, lead singer of Guns). We've been friends for a while. There was this open mike night when they did the record and I was down there with him. He invited me to sing on some songs.

What did you learn by touring with bands like Soundgarden and Ozzy Osborne?

Soundgarden, every night we'd get done and go out and watch the show. They're one of my favorite bands. They don't surround themselves a lot with the big rock and roll lifestyle. That was great for me. Sure, there's a lot of things that come part and parcel with what we do. After shows, there was just lots of cool conversation opposed to a lot of the other things that go on. They're definitely one of the best bands around.

Do you think the GNR tour is a good way for a lot of new people to get exposed to you?

Yeah, it's a sellout tour. If we play to 18,000 people and 100 of them get it, then that's great, it was worth it. I'm not going to underestimate anybody's fans, anybody's taste in music. At least give them the chance. If they don't like it then that's fine but you have to taste something before you can say it isn't good.

What are some of today's groups that you like to listen to?

I like to listen to Alice Donut. I like Nine Inch Nails, I like the new Ministry album, Lenny Kravitz. It's hard cos' i don't have the money to go out and buy any of it.

You don't? Not even with all this touring you've been doing?

JESSICA TAVERNA / COLLEGIAN

BIG MAN, LITTLE CLUB — The Native American bass player from the band Edan wailed it out Tuesday night at the Vertex as the headliners for the Triple Threat Tour.

No, someone's making money but it sure as hell isn't me. I'm poor. Everybody thinks that once you get signed, you're just rich, but you're not. You get paid $20 a day per diem and that's about it. But it's not about the money that we're doing it.

I figure the therapy that being in a band has done for me as far as being able to figure out how to release and therapeutically bleed myself, the money that it would have cost to get a doctor to do this for me would have probably cost just as much as what I'll probably make. I think I'm breaking even. I've just been paying my own doctor bill internally.

another Geritol.

In 1973, a little-known singer from New Jersey was brought on to open the festivities for the co-headlining Cold Blood and It's A Beautiful Day. (Is that a '70s name for a band or what?) That scruffy, working class opening act became the Boss, and all who flocked to the stadium that day can say they saw Bruce Springsteen in his raw, unpolished days before he was a mega-superstar.

The concert was held in the stadium until the late '70s, when the powers that be decided too many people were falling off the high concrete constructions that are the stadium and breaking some of the more important bones in their bodies. And the three police troopers that Hadley could offer to control the mass of collegiate humanity that descended upon them just wasn't quite enough.

Of course, if you were to make a list of the bands and musicians who have played here, it would be impressive in many ways. From Springsteen to Dylan, from the Violent Femmes to Naughty by Nature to Richie Havens — who played Woodstock (yes, that Woodstock), played the first spring special, joined us again in 1977, and is returning again this year — there has been a lot of excellent music made here for the masses.

So come out and enjoy the pond, hope that you are seeing the next Bruce Springsteen, and bask in the sunshine and some good music knowing that somehow, whether in the Collegian, the Index or at least in your own mind, you are part of history.

■ Quicksand

powerful, fast and ferocious tunes fronted by Schreifels' wails. Quicksand proved it possible to take a sound as classic as hardcore and transform it into a form of the '90s.

Schreifels quickly discards comparisons to Helmet and Fugazi, "People want to interpret a new band in terms of what they already know." As for the band's influences, "Everyone brings them in and we just kind of layer them on top of each other." And the influences are layered like bricks as Quicksand builds a wall of ire and vigor.

Quicksand knows no other way to go about music. Toning down the sound just wouldn't work. "We've actually tried to do that," said soft-spoken bassist Sergio Vega. "You can't really escape what you are and who you are."

At a recent show in the spacious downstairs of Cambridge's Middle East Restaurant, Quicksand packed the facilities with a mobile and vibrant crowd who gratefully screamed along with Schreifels and/or contributing to the moshing frenzy. "I like playing pretty much anywhere the kids are into it," said the boyish singer. Upon completion of the somewhat brief set, much of the crowd and floor were saturated.

UMass' outdoor stage should yield an arena finally large enough to contain Quicksand's huge sound. Fortunately the earth in front of the Campus Pond will prove much more capable of absorbing the sweat which a renovated bowling alley like the Middle East just can't.

a woman who states things like, "Here comes everybody" and "Sell me something I haven't already got." This eventually slides to the right speaker while an acoustic song plays simultaneously on the left. What does it all mean? You decide.

The straightforward songs, though vaguely reminiscent of early dB's, are extremely original, with great hooks and obtuse lyrics. "Spot the Setup" is excellent, with lines like, "I used to go out with supermodels, but it didn't make my life OK;" "The Second Grade Applauds" is entertaining, and "Slit My Wrists" is almost hypnotic. It takes some getting used to, but The Loud Family's disc will intrigue you. A-

Sport Fishin'!
Shadowy Men On a Shadowy Planet
Cargo Records

It's the third CD for this three-piece instrumental surf band from Canada. (They do the music between sketches on the TV show "Kids In the Hall.") Though their sound is cool, a little goes a long way; it's hard to listen to a whole disc at once. This time around, SMOASP asked "guitar weenie" Steve Albini to produce. Because of his past history with loud, abrasive, in-your-face acts like the Pixies, Jesus Lizard, Poster Childen, and of course his own Big Black, you'd think Sport Fishin' would be more exciting. Not so.

The drums do pack more punch than usual, but overall it sounds just like their first two CDs, which isn't bad, you understand. "Unwatchable," "Three Piece Suit" and "Fortune Tellin' Chicken" are good songs. Sadly their goofy song titles end up being more interesting than the songs themselves (ex: "Plastics for 500, Bob," and "Spy School Graduation Theme"). Good in small doses. B+ mesmerized. That face. That hair. That body. Two snaps up in the air to me! She leaned forward and kissed my lips as she said, "I'm so glad we will be working together this summer." The limo driver then drove Tori and me from the airport to the Warners lot. Tori told me not to be nervous around Ollie, since he's known as a director who comes off very stern. I thought I was going to keel.

All of a sudden people surrounded the limo and Tori told me it was a media blitz because she had just broken up with boyfriend Ryan Ozar. Great! I'm not even a household name and my face was about to be splashed across every tabloid newspaper in America. I pondered the thought, "Should I have my agent book Oprah now or later?" Rumors in Hollywood linked Tori with 90210 co-star Brian Austin Green and now we were about to be eaten alive by photographers.

It was the feeling that I have always desired: fame is all about being yourself and playing up to the cameras. I loved it! I finally understood how it must feel to be Madonna.

After our meeting with Ollie, the contract was signed by all at a celebration dinner at Mortons. In the corner of my eye I caught a glimpse of Winona Ryder. Her face glowed as she looked over in my direction. She came over to my table and told me how much she loved the Winona filmography that I had written. Somehow, she had gotten a hold of the Collegian after she declined an ASR exclusive interview I had tried so hard to get last semester.

After dinner Tori and I drove in her BMW to Shannen Doherty's house! I lost it. My Joseph Abboud silk shirt and Gianni Versace jeans weren't good enough to meet Shannen. I needed something from Gaultier and a pair of dark glasses. My JOOP! was emanating from my body the way the sun shines over earth. The door opened and there she was. I said, "It's so nice to meet you Brenda. I've. . ." She retorted "Funny. My name is Shannen." I've never felt so embarrassed in my life. Well, actually I have. It was when I met Mel Gibson in the men's room and thought he was one of the crew of the film being shot. Anyhow, Shannen, Tori, Brian Austin Green and I decided to go clubbing.

Forget American Express; being famous and having famous friends gives new meaning to membership has its privileges. We didn't wait in line and we were out having a blast. It was odd that only days ago I was in Amherst at school. The hardest decision about this new opportunity was deciding to leave school. I'll return in the future but right now I must concentrate on my career. Hey, things like this don't come around often. You gotta go with the flow. I leave you for Hollywood with what my mother told me "Sometimes you gotta put your best foot forward, and don't look back."

Adam Scott Roberts has a very creative imagination and he still is a Collegian columnist.

■ Havens

on stage. When he came off stage, he had become a star, a cultural icon.

The Woodstock legend tells us a happy accident of fate put Havens on stage first, as the chaos that can only ensue from 400,000 people converging on a farm in the middle of nowhere left organizers and promoters straining for an available act. Havens started strumming, made the words up as he went along and came up with "Freedom."

Drop the needle on your parents' beat-up copy of Woodstock or rent the movie on video. You will find Havens' call to arms still packs visceral power and conviction that transcends explanation. When he sings "Sometimes, I feel, Like a motherless child," one senses he truly means it. Or for another, more tender side of Havens, give a listen to his interpretation of The Beatles' "Here Comes the Sun," which cracked the Top 20 in 1971.

A quarter of a century later, Havens can still move an audience. At the 30th anniversary bash thrown for fellow cultural icon Bob Dylan last year, Havens held his own on a bill oozing with star power (Eric Clapton — need I say more?). His version of "Just Like a Woman" intensified the tenderness and bitterness in the words of one of Dylan's best compositions.

But as good as the original is, Havens' version had an advantage because of his uniquely throaty, yet tender singing voice. Indeed, Havens was blessed with amazing pipes and a richly textured baritone voice capable of wide dynamic range. He can evoke emotion not only with what he sings, but how, and that is truly a gift.

Include Havens' percussive style of acoustic guitar playing, which he uses to highlight the more emotional moments of songs, and you have a performer who can command a stage and an audience by himself, without smoke and mirrors.

Havens' influences are as rich and varied as the neighborhood he grew up in: Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn. Havens says he grew up there "at a special time — a time when the world lived in Brooklyn." The melange of different cultures gave Havens a global perspective while he pursued his first love — rock and roll.

"I sang street corner doo-wop until I was 20 years old," Havens recollects in his press biography. But street corners couldn't hold a talent like Havens, and soon he was strumming in coffee houses in Greenwich Village — which, when he moved there in 1961, were the center of the poetry and folk music universe.

Havens' first album, Mixed Bag, was released on the Verve/Folkways label in 1967. It won a gold record and established Havens as a new and vital voice in folk music — a voice which cried out, literally and figuratively, for "freedom" two years later. Later releases, including Something Else Again and Richard P. Havens, also went gold.

Those in the know will definitely be there when Havens goes on stage, because if past performances are indication, those on the pond lawn are in for a real treat. But even if you have no notion of late '60s culture and history and have never heard the man sing, make sure you're inside the orange snow fence when Havens starts strumming. You won't be disappointed.

live up to his musical standards."

The Wailers certainly have survived without Marley. In 1989, they received a Grammy nomination for their release I.D., an album that tried to further bridge the gap between reggae and other forms of popular music. Their latest effort, Majestic Warriors, promises a return to more rock-solid reggae roots. This album even includes a cover of Marley's own "Could You Be Loved," while being spiced with some dance hall rap by Jamaican mainstay DJ Tiger.

The band still includes Junior Marvin and Aston Barrett, the two who promised Marley they would uphold his standards. They are joined, more than capably, by bandmates Earl Lindo, Alvin Patterson, Irvin Jarrett, Michael Richards, Earl Fitzsimmonds and Andrew McIntyre.

The Wailers have now turned to the road to hone their live show and sharpen their slick reggae rhythms. They perform mostly their own music, but promise a few covers and, with luck, a few Bob Marley tunes in homage to their late leader. The group has survived Marley's death with triumphant spirit and is re-establishing itself as a premier force in both world and popular music.

The Wailers bring their pieces of musical history and their glimpses of the musical future to UMass for this year's Spring Concert, promising to move us all to their island rhythms.

■ Kravitz

Kravitz. The soothing piano and vocal combination create a tender and soulful selection.

"Sugar" is perhaps the brightest of the gems in this jewel-laden collection. Bolstered by Kravitz's mild yet inspiring vocals, "Sugar" is the best of the softer tunes.

A few tracks which miss the mark are "Just Be a Woman," which drags a bit, "My Love," which grates on the ears, and "Black Girl," which is a little too laid back for its own good.

These few exceptions aside, however, Are You Gonna Go My Way is a brilliant and diverse collection which showcases Kravitz's talents as a full-fledged rocker and as a tender balladeer. From the blazing riffs of "Are You Gonna Go My Way" to the magical vocals of "Sugar," the album is filled with wonderful and creative rock 'n' roll. Paying homage to past masters and facing the future head on, Are You Gonna Go My Way presents listeners with the best of both worlds.

David Scott chosen as new chancellor

Unanimous vote seals arduous five-month search

The Board of Trustees unanimously voted David K. Scott, 53, to be the next chancellor at the University of Massachusetts yesterday. Scott will take office July 1.

Scott served as provost at Michigan State University from 1986 to 1992. As part of receiving that university's John A. Hannah Distinguished Professor of Learning, Science and Society Award, Scott was on sabbatical at Oxford University, where he examined European educational systems last year.

Scott and Claudia Mitchell-Kernan, the dean and vice chancellor of graduate programs at the University of California at Los Angeles, were the finalists for the chancellorship out of 70 applicants.

Although Chancellor Richard O'Brien said he only met Scott briefly, he said he feels Scott's qualifications look very respectable on paper.

"I think my first suggestion would be that he has an outstanding faculty to work with and a very lively group of students. He better get well acquainted with both," said O'Brien, who will be ending his two-year tenure as interim chancellor at the semester's end.

Scott's salary as chancellor, $150,000, will be 38 percent more than that of Joseph Duffey, the University's last permanent chancellor.

Scott visited the campus and attended four forums at the end of March. During a student forum held in the Cape Cod Lounge, Scott discussed how he would work for greater admissions of minority students.

At Michigan State, Scott said he helped to implement recruitment of freshmen according to the racial diversity of graduating high school students across the state. Scott also mentioned that he would want students to be oriented on diversity during their first year.

To encourage a more diverse faculty, Scott said he would offer scholarships to women and minorities, and pressure departments to hire them.

Instead of raising tuition during a budget crisis, Scott

Scott appointment sparks mixed campus reaction

By TRACY MONAHAN

Students and administrators offered mixed reactions to the appointment of David Scott as chancellor of the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

Student Trustee Kevin Newnan said he believes Scott was "a good find." Newnan said he supports President Michael Hooker's decision.

"He's an interesting guy with a vision for the University and, I believe, the skills to pull it off," Newnan said.

Matt Pavesi, Undergraduate Student Senate speaker, said the Senate had no confidence in either candidate and had asked that the chancellor's search be reopened.

"We'll just lick our wounds and move on," Pavesi said. "We'll work with the new chancellor and he'll listen to our needs because he doesn't have the full support of the students."

Provost Glen Gordon said he believes Scott has a good

Amherst to sue UMass

Town votes to pursue $203,000 in fines

By FRANCIS ZERA
Collegian Staff

The town of Amherst voted Wednesday to sue the University for $203,000 in what it claims were misdirected traffic ticket fines, according to Amherst Select Board members.

For several years in the late 1980s, fines for traffic violations on University roads were sent to the University instead of to Amherst, which insists it should have received the money.

Jayme Chernoff, University Relations director, said the University wanted to have the matter settled by the state attorney general because it "would be faster and cheaper" than deciding the issue through litigation.

She added the University "understands why the town is taking this action," and "we hope the town understands why we could not take any action that is appealing to them."

Amherst Select Board Member Brenna Kucinsky said the issue, while not "adversarial," needs to be arbitrated by the courts. She said the town feared the attorney general's office would be biased in favor of the University since it is a fellow state agency.

Kucinski said the town hopes to "maintain a good relationship" with the University. She said that because the issue is being decided by a neutral party, "hopefully there will not be any bad feelings."

The money has been an issue since 1987, when Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia noticed the Northampton District Court was routing money from traffic fines issued on campus to the University. He considered this a misdirection of the funds.

A 1962 state act provides that the University trustees shall make rules and regulations for the "control, movement

Court decides BU can keep King papers, widow to appeal

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — A Superior Court on Thursday rejected claims by the widow of Martin Luther King Jr. to the papers the civil rights leader had given to Boston University.

The jury, ruling in a suit by Coretta Scott King, found that a July 16, 1964 letter that King signed constituted a binding charitable pledge to the school where he obtained his doctorate in theology.

The Suffolk Superior Court jury deliberated about seven hours over two days.

King's widow, Coretta Scott King, filed suit in December 1987, seeking return of 83,000 letters, documents and manuscripts that her husband had deposited with BU in 1964 and 1965.

Mrs. King argued King sent the papers to Boston University for safekeeping, but changed his mind before his April 4, 1968, assassination about giving them to the university.

Mrs. King's attorneys, who spoke with her by telephone, said she was disappointed the papers would not be sent to Atlanta and join the rest of his personal writings at the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change.

"There was ample evidence in the trial that Dr. King had changed his mind. In my mind there was no question there," said James O'Brien, a Boston attorney representing Mrs. King.

Archer Smith, an Atlanta attorney for Mrs. King, said the family was considering an appeal.

Earle Cooley, a Boston University trustee and its lead attorney in the case, said the jury simply found according to the law rather than emotion.

CCEBMS celebrates 25 years at University

A University of Massachusetts organization which seeks to provide support for students of color celebrated its 25th anniversary last night.

The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), founded in 1967, was developed to facilitate the admission, development and graduation rates of minority students.

The anniversary celebration was held at the New Africa House and consisted of an informal dinner, a choir performance and several speakers.

CCEBMS seeks to serve as an advocate for its students and works to ensure that the University and its components respond appropriately to their needs.

Mary Custard, the organization's tutorial program coordinator, planned for the event so that students who are currently involved would have a chance to celebrate the 25 years.

"I have arranged for the alumni of the organization to get together during July," Custard said. "But I didn't want current members to miss out on celebrating."

Custard said CCEBMS provides counseling and free tutorials for their members. There is also a program which matches first year students with juniors and seniors for peer counseling.

"We have also set up a multi-purpose lounge which will gradually become a library, and a computer center for students to take advantage of," Custard said.

According to Floyd Martin, the director of the program, the primary function of CCEBMS is to provide an understanding environment and support to students of all races.

"There are currently 560 students enrolled in the program, and we have assisted over 1,700 through the years," Martin said.

Vice Chancellor for Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action Fredrick C. Tillis, one of the founders of CCEBMS, addressed gatherers to remind them that the organization consists of high energy and ideas which makes it one of the most important bodies on campus.

"This celebration tonight is a great thing where we can gather and exchange cultures," Tillis said. "And we must work together to achieve goals for the best interest of the University."

4-H group celebrates RSO status on campus

UMass Collegiate 4-H, a newly recognized registered student organization, presented itself to the campus yesterday afternoon on Metawampe Lawn with information, free food and animals.

The organization, which currently includes 20 students and hopes to double its membership next semester, has been in existence on campus for two years and was recently granted RSO status from the Student Activities Office.

The event attracted students and small children, who appreciated the chance to drink free lemonade and play with animals.

Jenn Whitmore, a junior psychology major, brought most of the animals from her family's farm in Orange. She has been a 4-H member for 13 years.

"The little kids were thrilled," she said. "They just flock to [the animals]... a lot of them are Amherst kids. They've never seen animals."

But despite the presence of Ollie, a Mojave burro, Nanny, a Nabian goat and a number of lambs, bunnies and piglets, UMass Collegiate 4-H members were quick to point out that their organization's aims lie in community service well beyond the public perception of 4-H as being solely farm-oriented.

"We're not just cows, cookin' and crafts," said Katie Flynn, a sophomore animal science and pre-veterinary major. Flynn, who is chairing the group's effort to host the Collegiate 4-H regional conference at UMass this October, said community service and teaching leadership skills to members are Collegiate 4-H's biggest benefits.

This semester, UMass Collegiate 4-H traveled to Philadephia, where they co-hosted the 4-H regional collegiate conference. There, they met student groups from around the nation in such locales as Louisiana and Montana, that they hope to travel to and visit.

Among community service projects the group has recently undertaken is a program that allows them to work with "at-risk" high school-aged victims of physical abuse.

"The kids are excited to see us all the time," said Debbie Fatacanti, who has been a 4-H member since high school.

Sterilization and Latinas

Women not aware of birth control options

By STACY MALONE
Collegian Staff

Sterilization is readily used by Latina women as a method of birth control because they are not properly informed of all the available birth control options, according to a family planner educator of local Latino communities.

"Who has to be pregnant? Who should have the right to choose?" Luz Pina-Till, the director of the counseling and testing program for HIV at the Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts, asked during her discussion of "Reproductive Issues of Latina Women" last night in the Campus Center.

The talk was sponsored by the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center, the American Indian Student Association, the SGA Finance Committee and AHORA.

"Underdeveloped countries are being used as guinea pigs for birth control," Pina-Till said. "Many women are not informed that sterilization is a permanent method of birth control, are never told of other options and make uninformed choices."

Pina-Till said educating women of color and the Latina communities in various birth control methods is important so women understand sterilization is not their only choice. She said it is vital for people not only to advocate choice, but to advocate informed choice.

According to Pina-Till there are now many methods men and women can use for birth control, but women are still choosing sterilization. She said the reasons for this are a lack of information, religion, access to health care, lack of parental involvement and the focusing of birth control only toward women.

"Machismo still exists. Men are macho and being a macho man is a man who is behind a women's decisions and is perceived as strong," Pina-Till said. "Men often feel they need to show they are macho by having sex. In some countries macho is the number of kids a man has, but a macho man is a man who can have all those children and actually support them."

Pina-Till said she has worked in Puerto Rican communities for many years and although she is Colombian she said, "we are all different, but we are all the same, especially with sex, by keeping it all hush hush. You do it, but you don't talk about it."

"We need to start making cultural changes, because how we approach sex is engraved in our heads. It is controversial, but we need to do it," Pina-Till said. "We are dying of AIDS, we are dying of poverty so we definitely need to make some changes."

Sexual graffiti and thievery keep University police busy

Vandalism

• Tuesday morning janitorial staff in the University Library reported sexual graffiti on the stalls in the men's bathroom on the 23rd floor.

Larceny

• Tuesday afternoon two individuals in John Quincy Adams reported their room was entered and their color television and a stereo system were stolen. The goods were valued at over $350.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering

• Tuesday afternoon an individual reported someone has been entering his apartment at Lincoln Apartments since mid-April. More secure locking devices have been recommended.

said he would prefer to see an increase in state taxes to fund higher education.

The 15-member chancellor search committee began reviewing applicants for the chancellor position in late January. By mid-March the committee had narrowed the candidates to four; Luis Proenza, from the University of Alaska; Diether H. Haenicke, from Wester Michigan University; Michell-Kernan; and Scott.

During the last two weeks of March, each of the chancellorship finalists, except Haenicke, who withdrew his candidacy on March 23 due to pressing problems on his campus, toured the campus and attended four open forums for two days.

At the end of each forum, the audience could fill out evaluation forms, which would aid the committee in choosing a candidate. Although the Student Senate voted unanimously on April 7 to ask the committee to reopen its search, the committee forwarded the names of Mitchell-Kernan and Scott to University President Michael K. Hooker April 9.

"The deliberations and hard work that committee members contributed during the search speak highly of the campus as a whole. The final selections reflect the committee's assessment of the type of individual who will meet the needs of UMass Amherst in today's environment," said Rina K. Spence, chair of the committee.

Scott, who was born on the Orkney Islands located off the coast of northern Scotland, earned a bachelor's in physics in 1962 and a doctorate in physics in 1976 at Oxford University.

Acclaimed for his work on nuclear collisions, Scott is an American Physical Society fellow and has given lectures on this topic all over the world. Scott has written over 100 papers on nuclear collisions.

As a researcher at the University of California at Berkeley, Scott was the scientific director at the Cyclotron Laboratory.

Peter H. Cressy, who is president of the Massachusetts Maritime Academy, was chosen to be the new chancellor at UMass-Dartmouth. Cressy was a rear admiral in the U.S. Navy.

"Both of these individuals are outstanding academic leaders and I am confident in their abilities to move their respective campuses into the 21st century with vision and dynamism," Hooker said.

The campus community will be able to meet with Scott at an open reception today at 2:15 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

and parking of vehicles on the campus of the University," and that "... all fines and penalties recovered for violation of rules and regulations... shall be forwarded to the trustees of the University to be deposited in the scholarship trust fund."

But Kucinsky said, "Our attorneys believe the rule [that allowed the money to be sent to UMass] was not properly included" in the University charter.

On March 13, 1992, Chief Justice of the Northampton District Court Samuel Zoll agreed, saying any money collected by the court for these violations of state and municipal law was to be given to the town in which the violations occurred, the town of Amherst.

Matthew Pavesi, Speaker for the UMass Undergraduate Senate, said that the largest concern for students and the University was where the money would come from if Amherst was successful in court.

Pavesi said the town "can't balance the budget on the student's backs," and hoped the state would pay for the settlement if Amherst was successful in its suit.

Both the town of Amherst and the University agree that the decision is based upon a point of law, so "only a legal authority can issue a binding decision," Chernoff said.

understanding of the mission of a land grant university because Michigan State is a land grant university.

A land grant university, such as UMass, is one established under the Morrill Land Grant Act of 1863, which provided land for the construction of public universities dedicated to serving their surrounding communities.

"He's into the same issues we're concerned with — multiculturalism, economic development," Gordon said. "All the things we are now involved with."

SGA President David Nuñez said he is very eager to work with Scott.

"I'm eager to find out what is in his plan and how students are going to fit in," Nuñez said.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Thomas Robinson said Scott made an excellent statement to the Board of Trustees after being appointed.

"He put his finger on a number of issues that are critical to the University," Robinson said. "I look forward to working with him."

Student-trustee elect Al Lizana said he will try his best to build an honest and productive working relationship with Scott.

"I respect the president's decision and if he's wrong about this guy, there's going to be hell to pay," Lizana said. "For his sake and for Scott's sake I pray that he's not wrong."

Former Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Mike Poster was one of the student leaders who called for a reopening of the chancellor's search after meeting the three final candidates.

"Scott knows that students and [student] government are opposed to him as a candidate and he has something to prove," Poster said. "He'll have more of a willingness to work with the students."

Anarchy at commencement: Updike usurped by Deane

We interrupt the column normally occupying this space for a startling announcement. Graduating senior Gary Deane has somehow seized control of the public address system during graduation commencement ceremonies and is addressing the crowd from an unknown location as we speak.

Authorities are working furiously with local engineers, attempting to subdue Deane's booming tirade. Confusion reigns as the commotion created is quickly inspiring the crowd to near-riot conditions.

We bring you now to McGuirk Stadium, where what is simply known to the crowd as "The Voice" continues to echo to the stunned masses.

"...And furthermore, none of my professors knew diddley about using VCRs. These folks have doctorates, don't they?"

"We've supposedly completed our higher education, but how many of our graduates still don't know who was the killer in Basic Instinct? And I still don't know why women move the rear-view mirror to look at themselves, while men crane their heads in front of the mirror to look at themselves."

"But seriously, let me speak for all students when I say good riddance to the people of Amherst. With all your constant complaining about UMass students, you've forgotten a major point in finance. The students here are paying your way through college! Student fees pay for much of the PVTA you ride, so we can get to your stores in town and keep you in business."

"The concerts you enjoy, from Mullins to Bright Moments to the Pond Concert, are paid for by students, and they attract yet more consumers of pizza and earrings and shoes through town. And I hope you all have enjoyed the FAC — you're sure there enough. So UMass owes Amherst $200,000? I suggest a countersuit, or we're moving the franchise to Boston and changing the color of our uniforms!"

Gary
DEANE

"The bars in Amherst are abhorrent. They are all small and smoky, and unless you like standing and people-watching for hours, there's absolutely nothing to do there. The cheap owners wouldn't spend money to keep even themselves in business, since they spend so much cash playing golf with the police department. Then they tried to persuade us to feel bad for them. We didn't buy it."

"Back to the Mullins Center: we paid a chunk of change for this place, and Mullins just released a newsletter explaining that spring is usually a 'quiet time' for large venues. 'Quiet' must mean 'lights out for six months unless Slash plays in a cast.' I guess in the fall it will continue to attract top-rate entertainment (in the form of magicians), but basically I spent a week's rent to see the basketball team play in a quieter place. Don't be surprised to see it crash down and become a McDonald's, because the contractors broke more codes than Sherlock Holmes."

"I, like the students here today, have been taught at this University. I was taught that America was a pristine heaven-on-earth until Columbus arrived. Native Americans never had brutal wars or methods of torture in their utopia."

Fortunately, I refused to learn the lessons I was taught. Whichever race and gender has the upper hand in terms of power will pounce on any other. You might call it human nature, but it is human history. I refuse to celebrate 'Indigenous People's Day' as much as Columbus Day. They are equal in ignorance."

"I myself know of many other better reasons to hate people besides resorting to race differences, which brings me to ... "

Your attention please, if everyone will please find their seats, thanks to the efforts of the National Guard, 'The Voice' has been found cowering with a portable microphone in the 17th row of the stands, and has been given 40 lashes. We will now continue where we left off...

May the College of Arts and Sciences please stand..."

Simply Homo in Extremis

There's a closet that we all live in at one time or another. It's filled with photo albums, letters, our old teddy bear, some harsh words, a broken promise, a broken heart, a broken dream. Twisted among the often grueling darkness is the anxiety and fear of never being able to open the door.

E.C.
THOMAS

And there you sit, knees drawn up to your chest, a candle burning fiercely at both ends, while your mind tosses and turns like the memories in your head, trying to figure out just who locked the door, and who walked away with the key. The never-ending question of responsibility and never-ending feeling of consequence.

I used to think my parents were the roots of all my troubles — and I was the start of all theirs. How many times have you heard someone say, "My parents screwed me up"? Or "If it weren't for me my parents wouldn't have to work so hard — they'd be happier"?

It's so easy to escape that way. Put the problems onto someone else, lock them in their own closet and walk away with the key to your happiness. Well, a temporary happiness. Until the next problem comes up and we need to search for a new closet to escape from our own. Taking responsibility for your own actions — a scary endeavor.

It's all just too convenient. I mean who wants to sit among tormenting thoughts? Who wants to be alone with the face of responsibility staring down upon you, with its glaring eyes of judgement: "GUILTY."

Yes, you accept. Guilty, guilty, guilty.

There's actually an official term for this process of turmoil: Homo in Extremis — man being pushed to the limits from extreme circumstances. My housemate explained it better as "man spending a lot of time alone, thinking too much, making his plaguing thoughts the actual reality."

Being alone can do that to a person. Thinking too much is self-destructive. Thinking too little is dangerous.

There's no winning, is there? The closet of retreat always looks better.

The Closet: a protective door with a keyhole of responsibility and a deadbolt of judgement mounted on hinges of regret.

The eroded sands of time, or the ones washed out to sea. The regrets of not waking up alone — or waking up with no one. The regrets of drinking that 40 oz. in under 30 minutes — or staying sober to actually think during them. The regrets of hello, the ones of good-bye. The regrets of taking the risk, the ones of walking away.

Regrets always seem to pile high at the end of a semester. But you have a choice: leave them behind, or take them along during your summer travels. Most likely the baggage will weigh you down until eventually you're part of it. Welcome to the closet.

I knocked on someone's closet door a few days ago. I knocked for awhile without any answer. Upset and frustrated that I had left my own closet to come to his, I pounded — loudly. He slowly and timidly cracked the door open. Before me sat the physical example of Homo in Extremis. He'd been in there so long that his withdrawn face was ghost white and his eyes a burning red.

We talked for a while; he seemed healthier and happier with each passing word. But somewhere along the way responsibility and regret whispered its sweet nothings in his ear, and now his door is closing.

I'd grab a doorstop or a crow bar to stop it, but it would only work for a short time, most likely slamming in my face and then I'd be left alone — in open vulnerable space. And then what? Run back to my own closet?

Ah, yes — the never-ending cycle. Responsibility. Consequence. Regret. Alone. The gavel falls... guilty, guilty, guilty.

Reno is not to blame for Waco

In his column [Collegian, April 30], Michael Morrissey states that Attorney General Janet Reno is under scrutiny for mishandling the Waco incident. I would like to make a few things clear.

First, Reno is by no means on trial to defend her actions, she is simply stating what, in her views, occurred in Waco, why it occurred and what, if anything could have been different. Reno is not being judged, nor are her actions. To my knowledge, nobody has said that Reno's actions were wrong. Reno made a very difficult decision over a period of time. She has openly stated that she did give careful consideration to other means of ending the standoff, but came to the conclusion that using tear gas would be safest for all those involved. Reno would not have acted on that decision had she not thought it was in her best judgment to do so.

Secondly, President Clinton is not leaving Reno to twist in the wind like somebody's clothes hung out to dry. Clinton has stated several times, in no uncertain terms, that he supports Reno's decision 100 percent. In fact, both Clinton and Reno did meet together to discuss the idea of the tear gas invasion before it was carried out.

Thirdly, Reno did not mishandle the Waco incident. The cult members killed themselves. The whole basis of using tear gas was to get the cult members to leave the compound alive. If anybody is to be blamed for mishandling the Waco incident, it should be the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. The head of the ATF, Paul Higgins, has been asked to step down from his position at the end of the hearings.

Reno wanted the Waco incident to end without tragedy. During one of the hearings, Reno was asked by a congressman how she could rationalize the death of almost two dozen children. Reno's response was that she wasn't rationalizing the death of the children or the four ATF men killed on February 28 when the Waco incident began.

As she was saying that, her voice cracked and a tear ran down her cheek. She brushed it away, and said to the congressman, "I feel more strongly about the incident than you or anybody else will ever know." Attorney General Reno is not to be blamed for the Waco incident.

Students treated poorly at TOC

Last Friday night my three friends and I decided to take a break from the dining commons and head up to the Top of the Campus Restaurant. We had been there before and thought it was just "okay," but since we were short on cash it was our only option. We were definitely attracted by the five dollar discount they offer students on the meal plan. The money we had was just enough to cover dinner.

At the end of dinner the waitress took our ID's to run them trough the machine so the meal could be deducted from our account. Fifteen minutes later the waitress came back saying two of our ID's didn't run through the machine, meaning we had no meals left for that week.

After trying to explain, we summoned the manager. He took our ID's back to the machine to try them again, but with no success. Even after a thorough explanation that we were 100 percent sure we had meals left, he insisted that we didn't because they had used the machine earlier in the night with no problems, he was telling us. Go figure.

He then suggested we pay without the student discount, then later we were supposed to go somewhere else and get a refund. I don't think so. First of all, we didn't have the money to pay anyway. Second, why should we be inconvenienced — it wasn't our fault. He made other demands like holding our ID's until the next day, but we didn't let him do that (how were we supposed to get past security in the dorm, or eat?).

Finally he wanted us to go into his office down the hall. We reluctantly followed, and once there we "had" to give him our social security number, phone number and room number. If we were adults, would he make us go into his office? Better yet, if we were with our parents would he make us go into his office? I don't think so.

The manager of the TOC was rude and obnoxious. He treated us like we were five years old and he was our dictator. Being an HRTA major I am outraged. How can the TOC survive in an industry whose motto is "the customer is always right?" Never in my life have I experienced something like this, and it just shows how the TOC really feels about their primary customers, the students.

Whose land is it? US role in the Arab-Israeli conflict

There are a lot of things to be learned here at UMass, from professors as well as students. Lately I've been learning disturbing things that make me sit back and wonder about our government.

I want to point out two instances that perhaps don't go hand in hand with the image of democracy and justice that the USA stands for: 1) the land of America — who does it belong to? and 2) the Arab-Israeli conflict in the Middle East — whose land is it?

After the Holocaust, the surviving European Jewish people began emigrating to Palestine, claiming it was theirs by biblical rights; it was the land God had promised them thousands of years before. "A land without a people for a people without a land," was one of the commonly used phrases at the time. However, if you look closer, you would see that there were people living there. The state of Israel was founded in a series of wars and treaties. The U.S. government was instrumental in helping Israel obtain these lands. Sure, the U.S. has a history of this very action.

When Europeans began to emigrate to America, the government went in and cleaned out Native Americans to make room for the new European settlers. How is that fair? The only finger I am pointing is at the U.S. government. Haven't they done enough damage here without having to add wood to the inferno that the Middle East has become? You could say these two events are past history and there's no use talking about them, but is it really fair to leave it like that? I'll bet if you ever took the time to go to Israel or visit an American Indian reservation you might ask yourself the question I ask myself every day: Whose land is it?

King

The case centered on the 1964 letter, in which King had agreed to deposit his papers with the university. But the letter spelled out that King retained ownership of the papers until he either designated them as gifts to BU or until his death.

Mrs. King's lawyers argued the letter was neither a contract nor a pledge, but simply a statement of intention that King could change at any time.

The letter was signed at the same time Boston University Professor Harold DeWolf, a friend and mentor of King's, packed up the first batch of papers in 1964.

King sent another batch of papers to BU in 1965, but then didn't send any more.

BU argued at the trial that King got too busy. Mrs. King argued that her husband had decided against depositing additional papers.

Another key issue was over the length of time it took Mrs. King to make a claim.

BU argued Mrs. King should have known no later than the fall of 1984, when Boston University President John Silber spoke to an archivist at the King center in Atlanta, that BU was claiming ownership of the papers.

The endless party

Wild movie does anything for a laugh

By MARTIN BROWN
Collegian Staff

Here's another one for people who don't like their movies too deep. I figure with the end of the semester drawing near, the last thing you want to see is a depressing movie. If you want to be depressed, just think about finals for about ten minutes. So I guess I'll serve up a movie with no redeeming social value, a movie that will do just about anything to get a laugh, a movie that will make the politically correct go into convulsions — Bachelor Party.

Bachelor Party — Video Pick of the Week

Bachelor Party belongs in a small group of films that never really attempt to be profound, basically they just want to show nothing but a good time. Some other classics are National Lampoon's Animal House (of course), Stripes and Risky Business.

Tom Hanks plays Rick, basically a good guy who decides he is going to marry Debbie (Tawny Kitaen). After he announces the decision to his friends, they decide to throw him a bachelor party. Hence the name.

The movie is a steady stream of laughs mostly due to Hanks' performance. He is able to look good while still being a total wise-ass. For instance, in one unforgettable scene, Rick is playing tennis with Debbie's parents. Every time the ball comes to him he hits it as hard as he can, knocking it clear over the fence. Then he drops his racket and pretends like he has hit a home run, much to the chagrin of Debbie's father. After a few times, the parents just give up and quit.

Kitaen also does a fine job as Rick's girlfriend. You may remember her from the Whitesnake videos "Here I Go Again" and "In the Still of the Night" from a few years ago. She works with Hanks perfectly, allowing him to cut loose to a great extent. They come off as the perfect couple, and make you understand why Rick is willing to give up his "amateur status" of being single, and "go pro" (get married).

Like I said earlier, Bachelor Party isn't very politically correct (but hey, it does have a song by REM in it). It does glorify sex, drugs and rock-n-roll, but then again is that really such a bad thing.

Here's something you heard from me first. I think Neil Jordan got the idea for the relationship in The Crying Game from Bachelor Party. The Jaye Davidson role has been done before. Well maybe not exactly, but it certainly is food for thought. Check it out.

The story and directing were done by Neal Israel. Who's that? Beats me, I don't think he has done anything big since. For this kind of movie though, does it matter?

So, if you're looking for an escape from end of the semester blues or if you're taking yourself a little too seriously, go rent Bachelor Party. It's a classic party movie that has a lot of big payoffs in laughs (is that line cliche or what?). What more can you ask from a movie with a title like Bachelor Party? (Rated R. 92 minutes)

Critical fave Inclined execute riveting show

By ADAM GOULSTON

Inclined
Pearl Street
May 4, 1993

Two words capture the fancy of every concert-goer. If you said "Axl Rose," flip to the comics. The words I speak of are "free show." Granted, every free show isn't necessarily worthy of your attention. But when one has a chance to catch a band with the capabilities of Inclined, this opportunity is not to be missed.

The upstart trio of Los Angeles 23-year-olds known as Inclined modestly pulled off a 90-minute set which could be described as nothing less than radiant. Unfortunately a crowd of only about 50 appreciative patrons (fronted by Bobby the drunk guy whose random yells of "I gotta tell you, you're the chief," earned him the affections of Inclined drummer Steve Smart) enjoyed the Tuesday performance.

Sunk in the Funk, a decent trio with a bad name, opened the show with a set of bass-driven rockers reminiscent of Les Claypool's Primus. While some of the songs stumbled thanks to mediocre drumming and bad arrangement, some were quite palatable. The band closed with a half-decent cover of Primus' "Jerry Was A Race Car Driver."

Inclined's first album, Bright New Day (Chaos/Columbia) has slipped into the market receiving critical praise but little other recognition. Meanwhile the band, fronted by highly talented vocalist/guitarist/cellist Miles Tackett (son of Little Feat's Fred Tackett), has embarked on a small-scale mostly East Coast tour.

From the opening song, the riveting "How Deep is This Well?" the Inclined meshed as a tight and synchronized unit. While the trio still appears understandably a bit stiff on-stage, these youthful nerves in no way affect their musical freedom. This first song surprisingly kept the jamming to a minimum. Based on the musical expansion of Bright New Day, intuition told me this conservative approach would not last.

For the duration of the next few songs, Tackett's guitar resonated masterfully throughout the sparsely-filled Pearl Street basement. Backed by the solid bass work and backup vocals of Gene Perry and the impeccable timing of Smart, Inclined maintain the crowd's interest while expanding upon their jams.

Tackett and company's tunes included the funky and driven "The Atom," and a slightly overblown and disappointing version of "Two Minds," both off Bright New Day. Also of note was the passionate "Somewhere in the Middle" capped by Tackett's blazing and emotional guitar work and an unexpected mid-song speed-riff. Then came the intermission.

You heard me correctly, Inclined actually had to have a five minute intermission while Tackett set up his cello and Perry strapped on a "self-taught" twelve-string guitar-like instrument known as the Chapman stick.

The music to follow would truly be a delight. Tackett's cello and the warbling of the Chapman stick project a unique blend of mystical refrains.

"She Won't Go," the best track off the debut album was pulled off to perfection as Tackett combined restrained vocals with

Microfridge
All in One Compact Refrigerator, Freezer & Microwave Oven
Rent One Now, Pay For It During The Summer
You've probably seen one already, sleek, streamlined, matching top to bottom. You've probably used someones already, and maybe made floormates shut their doors when they see you and your popcorn coming. You may have wished you had rented one before the supply dwindled away to nothing. NOW YOU CAN HAVE ONE FOR YOUR VERY OWN.
In an effort to meet the needs of our residents who would like to rent a Microfridge but can't afford it right now, Housing Services will allow you to rent a Microfridge - and ask you to pay for it, NOT NOW, but during THE SUMMER.
If you would like to take advantage of this offer, stop by the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and sign a contract.
P.S. I would hurry. Remember, it's first come, first served.

the deep reverberations of the cello. Backed by acoustic guitar and drums, the tune was quite engaging.

"Might Not Know It Now" proved a bold venture into the benefits of gifted musicians. Cello played lead into Tackett's solo, a captivating blend of strumming and plucking. This was followed by a precise Chapman stick solo by Perry — a fantastic combination.

Closing the set was a tune entitled "A Frightening Day." The title was just a formality as it became apparent 10 minutes into the song that this was a free-form jam, no holds barred. A good 20 minutes must have passed before the crowd grew a little fidgety. And the band played on. For how long they played, I know not, I lost track. But Bobby liked it as did the rest of the crowd which was now down to about 35.

Nonetheless, Inclined played a brief encore before departing. Watch out for these guys, they could be around for quite some time. And if Tuesday's free show was any indication, you'll be inclined to like them.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Helpful and entertaining information comes from the media. Use your extraordinary mental energy to learn more about a special subject. Travel helps you combine business with pleasure.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The good times keep rolling. Align yourself with people who challenge you to do new skills. Work proceeds peacefully. To help a teen-ager, do more listening than lecturing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Express your views charmingly and people you like will respond favorably. Although there is some reluctance to be away from home, travel will be good for business.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Sensitivity to a partner's needs and desires is connected with travel or learning. You are pleased with an increase in income, even if you must work extra hard. Build a nest egg.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): Good people offer to help you in your work. A new partnership can be thrilling, opening previously closed doors. Do not shy away from using your social contacts.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22): The choices you make now should help you maintain equilibrium in your life. Showcase your special talents to catch the eye of someone influential.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22): Remain steadfast, higher-ups will be impressed by your integrity. Those with generous motives are rewarded. A teenager gets great news involving summer employment.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21): Travel plans can be realized now. You welcome overtures from an attractive newcomer. Give more thought to the future. By paying attention to warning signs, you could avert a major health problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21): Plan a special but inexpensive outing for loved ones. Even small changes in your lifestyle will lead to greater happiness. Domestic adjustments are desirable.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19): Focus on your work early in the day. Do not let confusion over funds get the best of you. Experts can help you find a solution. Stop second-guessing your decisions.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18): Get down to the nitty-gritty and you will come up with a workable - if not especially palatable - plan. Monetary dealings may not go smoothly.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20): A message or phone call urges you to join forces with others. Let someone else carry the ball for a change. Your outside interests benefit from your ability to fly solo today.

top eight would be likely," said coach Julie LaFrenniere, who has had to juggle her line-up. LaFrenniere also has done a wonderful job organizing the entire meet.

UMass has two strong athletes in the throwing events. Dianne Ozzolek is ranked 5th in a competitive field in the hammer. Natalie Hart is ranked right behind Roy in the shot put.

The impressive Minutewoman 800-meter relay team is ranked third, recently setting a school record at 9:00.71.

Home field at stake for Gorillas tomorrow

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Although the University of Massachusetts mens lacrosse team clinched a spot in this years USILA tournament with Wednesday's win against Brown, tomorrow's 1:00 p.m. game against Army still has huge implications.

With a win against the Cadets tomorrow at West Point, N.Y., the Gorillas could garner not only the fourth or fifth seed in the country but also a first-round playoff game at Garber Field.

Winning tomorrow's game will not be an easy task for UMass, as No. 11 Army (10-3) has players who are fast and can score quickly as well as players who play solid in-your-face defense.

"They are have a legitimate lacrosse program," said UMass goalie Tom LoPresti. "If we beat them, I think we'll get the number five seed in the nation and that's what we want.

LoPresti, as well as his teammates, would also love home field advantage in the playoffs.

"We definitely want the home field advantage," he said. "If we win the first game, we'll go to the second round and win that one and then we're going to the final four!"

But UMass will first have to contend with the likes of Steve Heller, the Cadets leading scorer with 34 goals and 15 assists and Phil Mandry, who is not far behind with 31 goals and 13 assists. Chad Allen is also a player to watch as he has 15 assists to go along with 13 goals. The UMass offense will have to be sharp against goalie Rick Aguilar, who has turned away an impressive 75 percent of the shots he has faced this season.

Massachusetts attacker Mark Millon will no doubt be the focus of the Army D so Wes Depp (35 goals), Mike Valente (14 goals, 14 assists), and Bill Edell will have to play well. But the UMass players know their abilities and appear confident going into tomorrow's game.

"When we're on fire," said Edell, "we can play with anyone."

Lax Notes: All the action can be heard on 91.1 F.M. WMUA with lacrosse guru Mike Fagerson doing the play-by-play. Fagerson, who has announced UMass games for the past decade, will be broadcasting his last regular season game as he is taking a job in Maine — tune in and hear history being made.

Baseball faces Temple, post-season on the line

By ARTHUR STAPLETON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team hosts Atlantic 10 rival Temple this weekend for a three-game series, looking to win at all costs and better its chances of making the post-season.

Even if UMass sweeps the Owls, the Minutemen (16-19, 8-9 in the A-10) still must hope for some help from their other rivals in order to receive an invitation to the A-10 Tournament, which is comprised of the top four teams.

Heading into the weekend of action, UMass head coach Mike Stone's crew is tied for fifth place with St. Joseph's. The Hawks have a three-game set at the University of Rhode Island. George Washington, which is tied for fourth with Temple, travels to St. Bonaventure for the weekend.

In other words, the Minutemen do not control their own destiny, and in addition to performing on the field, they have to do some rooting off of the field.

Stone said that his team must focus on winning one game at a time.

"We can't take these games as normal games; we need to play the best we have so far this year," said Stone. "This group has to start concentrating on that right now, because we just can't show up and expect to win."

Temple (15-18, 9-8 in the A-10) has two hurlers who are strong, and should start on Saturday against the Minutemen. Sophomore Stephen Hoppel (5-3) is the ace of the staff, with an earned run average of 2.79. Hard-throwing left-hander Rob Kell is 4-6 with a 4.43 ERA.

UMass will counter with its two aces, redshirt sophomore Jay Murphy (4-0) and senior Jeff Toothaker (5-6) on Saturday.

The players said they realize the significance of this weekend, and hope to pull out the sweep.

"It comes down to this three-game series. I guess that's what it's all about: win three games and turn our season around," said Toothaker, who has not missed an A-10 tournament in his career.

"We have to win all three, but we have to take one game at a time," said catcher Andy Pelis. "We can't win all three if we don't win the first."

"I think if one person steps it up, we all will," said shortstop Greg LaRocca. "It'll be a chain reaction, hopefully, and we'll take all three."

The first game between the two clubs starts at 12 p.m. on Saturday at Earl Lorden Field. The game on Sunday is at noon.

A-10 champs UMass sweep Lady Dragons

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

After sweeping the University of Rhode Island yesterday to clinch the regular season Atlantic 10 title, the University of Massachusetts softball team returned home yesterday, trying to avoid a letdown against the Drexel University Lady Dragons.

The Minutewomen, playing their eleventh game in six days, swept the Lady Dragons by identical 3-0 scores to up their season record to 27-19.

In the first game, the Minutewomen tallied hits in every inning except the third, but were unable to score until the sixth.

Senior catcher Sherri Kuchinskas (2-for-3, 2 doubles, one run scored) started the winning rally with a double to right-center field. Kuchinskas advanced to third on a sacrifice bunt by junior first baseman Rachel Lawson and scored the go-ahead run on a scorching double down the left field line by senior third baseman Laurie Dondarski.

UMass scored its other two runs on a throwing error by the catcher and a passed ball.

Sophomore Kelly Daut (13-11) went the distance, allowing no runs on three hits with one strikeout.

Kuchinskas scored the Minutewomen's first run in the nightcap when she walked in the third and was again advanced into scoring position by a Lawson sacrifice. She scored one out later when sophomore center fielder Heather Dorsey singled to left.

UMass added two insurance runs in the fifth when, with Dorsey on third and junior second baseman Tracey DuEst on first, freshman designated hitter Michelle Shaw drove one to the left field fence for a double-bagger, plating both runners.

Senior hurler Darlene Claffey registered the win in the second game, allowing four Drexel hits over seven innings. She struck out four and walked one, while increasing her season record to 14-7.

The Minutewomen host Canisius on Saturday and Adelphi on Sunday with both doubleheaders starting at 1 p.m.

Zoo Disc makes a bid for the NE Sectionals

By DAVID GLEESON
Collegian Correspondent

After moderate success at a Hampshire College tournament this past weekend, the University of Massachusetts ultimate frisbee team, Zoo Disc, is looking for a better performance this weekend at the Western New England sectionals. Zoo Disc will compete at Williams College in an attempt to win a bid to the New England sectionals, and then to the collegiate Nationals

Last weekend, Zoo Disc lost two games at the Hampshire tournament, balanced by one victory over their long-time rival Hampshire. After trading scores in the first half, Zoo gradually began to pull away, and after a 9-9 tie, shut down Hampshire's offense for the remainder of the game, ending it at 15-9.

Their good performance was due largely to their control and organization. They were working well together and setting the pace of the match. Everyone was giving excellent performances, highlighted by timely scoring by Tom Bolan and solid defense and disc handling by Chris Winkler and Bill McDonald.

At the onset of their second game against the University of Vermont, Zoo seemed a little unorganized and allowed UVM to get a big lead early. Although UMass staged a small rally in the second half, they could not penetrate their opponent's strong defense, and UVM was victorious and eventually won the tournament.

The next game against Boston College had Zoo Disc playing some of its worst disc, followed by some of its best play of the year. After letting poor play put them in the hole 8-1, they pulled together for the second half rally and made it a contest. Time ran out before they could create enough turnovers for a second half upset, though. Though they outscored their opponent 12-7 in the second half, BC took the contest with a final of 15-13.

With Zoo Disc being largely a young team, its accomplishments thus far have been commendable, and this weekend at sectionals could be the beginning of more good things to come.

"There will be some teams there we've beaten, but sectionals are going to be tough. It will be good experience for myself and the younger players though." said team member Chris "Lippy" Hyndes.

With the top four teams going on to the sectionals, Zoo looks good after beating three of the teams already during the regular season.

Men's track team heads to Worcester for ECC's

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

This weekend the University of Massachusetts men's track team heads to Worcester for the Eastern Conference Championship.

After three straight weekends of successful invitational meets, where points are scored for the individuals only, the Minutemen will compete as a team in the first conference meet of the year.

The University of Southern Connecticut and the University of Rhode Island are projected as early favorites. Southern Conn completely dominated the Connecticut State Championships while URI has been impressive as well, but UMass looks to give both schools a run for it.

"A lofty goal would be first," said coach Ken O'Brien. "Second or third would be a realistic shot."

The key for UMass to be successful is a combination of strength and balance. The Minutemen will need their top flight performers to gain first or second places, but equally important to the team's success will be people stepping up to place in the third, fourth and fifth spots.

UMass will likely be without the services of sprinter/jumper John Johnson. Johnson suffered a hamstring injury during the 100 meters last weekend. UMass will look for Chris DiMatio to step up in the long jump, while Paul Doyle will probably replace Johnson in the first leg of the 400-meter relay.

Fortunately for O'Brien, other than Johnson, the team is healthy.

Lyonel Benjamin, coming off his best meet of the year will be a strong contender in both the 100 and 200. He will also anchor the 400 relay team.

Tom Galligani will look to avenge his first loss of the season this weekend in the Women's track hosts N.E. Championships

By ANTHONY GUIDO

The University of Massachusetts will host the biggest event of the women's track and field season this weekend. Today and tomorrow Llewelyn Derby track is the site of the New England Championships.

There are five events which highlight the two day meet:

The 400-meter hurdles, featuring Allison Poulin of the University of New Hampshire, who has put up Olympic Trial-type numbers at 58.71.

The hephathalon has Terry Roy of the University of Connecticut ranked second in the country in the event.

The 800-meter will match Kathleen Stewart from Boston University against a strong field which includes UMass' Kerry Aker.

Minutewoman Becky Johnson will be in strong contention in the 1500 m, battling Christine Steif of BU.

In the triple jump, BU's All-American Karen Phillips is top ranked. UMass' Janey Meeks is a distant second.

Overall, UConn is the dominant favorite. Only a major upset would keep the Huskies from the team title. BU and Boston College pose the strongest challenges.

The outlook isn't quite so bright for UMass. Without the Liljeblad twins, Kelly (defending 5000-meter champ) has red-shirted this season and Kim (versatile relay and distance runner), the team is in disarray.

"Fifth overall would be a miracle,

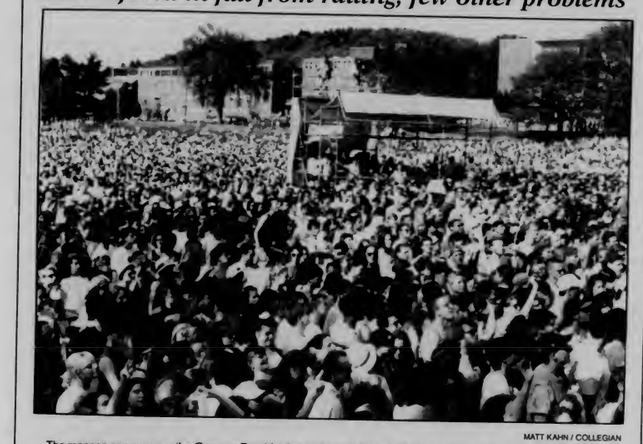
Pond Concert draws big crowd

Man injured in fall from railing, few other problems



MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

The masses converge on the Campus Pond for fun and sun at this year's Spring Concert, which drew an estimated 10,000 concert-goers to see and hear five live musical acts.

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Gorgeous, sunny, 80-degree weather yesterday sent an estimated 10,000 concert-goers home from the Campus Pond with sunburns and hangovers, following the University of Massachusetts' annual Spring Concert.

See related story, page 7

A 20-year-old non-student was injured during the festival when he reportedly fell 12 feet from a Morrill Science Center railing. At press time, Christopher O'Neill of Rhode Island was still being operated on at the Bay State Medical Center in Springfield.

Witnesses say O'Neill climbed over a railing between sections of the building, according to University Spokesperson Karin Sherbin. Apparently, O'Neill attempted to jump to the sidewalk below, but lost his balance and fell to the ground, she said.

EMTs arrived at the scene at about 4 p.m. and treated him at the scene and brought him to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, Sherbin said. He was then transferred to the Bay State Medical Center.

Otherwise concert-goers survived the day with few real problems. From 12:30 to 7:30 p.m. the sometimes raucous, sometimes sedate audience members were entertained by the following musical acts, in this order: the Valley native group Canine Bastards, the hard-core quartet Quicksand, Richie Havens who played the very first Spring Concert as well as the legendary Woodstock of 1969, the Wailers of the former Bob Marley and the Wailers, UMass alumni Dinosaur Jr., and the New Jersey rap trio Naughty by Nature.

Sherbin reported a few other more minor medical problems due to the sun and temperature, such at heat exhaustion, which were treated on the spot. She said there were no arrests or major problems.

The annual Spring Concert, organized by the student-run Union Program Council and partially paid for by student fees, was held in the Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium until the early '70s, when officials changed its location to the lawn in front of the Campus Pond.

State at odds over school choice issue

By KENDRA WILLETT
Collegian Staff

A state-wide conference of secondary school educators offered varying views on the issue of school choice at the University of Massachusetts Friday.

The day-long conference featured presentations by state Sen. Arthur Chase, a member of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, Secretary of Education Piedad Robertson, state Sen. Stanley Rosenberg and state Rep. Ellen Story.

William M. Bulger, president of the state Senate, who was scheduled to attend the conference, was unable to attend due to recent racial problems in one of the Boston public high schools.

A school choice policy already exists in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which allows allows students to attend schools outside of their district based on available space.

The debate over whether or not families should have the right to choose which school their children will attend was the major concern of the conference.

According to information released at the conference, supporters of school choice assert it will improve the quality of education, while opposition express serious concern about the overall effects of choice, including transportation and funding.

Bailey W. Jackson, dean of the School of Education, addressed school administrators attending the conference, saying that the school choice issue was the right topic at the right time.

"The quality of education is declining at the time that it is needed most," UMass President Michael Hooker said.

According to Hooker, school choice is exactly the kind of issue the University should be looking at, and supports any kind of movement which will increase competition.

"I want to be convinced by a specific proposal so that costs are equitable, and injustice is not created for students that school choice is not an option for," Hooker said.

Secretary of Education Robertson said she believed a middle ground could be found between supporting school choice and finding the funds.

"I am not against the philosophy of school choice, but a lack of transportation, lack of equity and lack of information for parents about the program needs to be considered," Robertson said.

Speaking on behalf of Bulger, Hooker read from a prepared speech that Bulger had presented to the Harvard Club in February.

Bulger said he supports the school choice proposal because it offers the best means of salvaging failing schools, and improving public education.

"I support it because it will empower parents to exercise

Flynn pleads for peace; school to reopen today

By KEN GUGGENHEIM
Associated Press

BOSTON — As South Boston High School prepared to reopen Monday following last week's racial clash, Mayor Raymond Flynn appealed for "no more hate."

Flynn met for two hours Sunday with a multiracial group of about 25 South Boston High School students to try to ease the tensions that led to rock-throwing, fist fights and race-baiting Thursday. Flynn was among five people injured in the brief disturbance.

"We're depending on the young people to help us bring unity and peace to South Boston High School and to the city," Flynn said at a news conference following Sunday's two-hour, closed-door meeting. "Tragically, there are a number of adults who don't contribute to solving the problem."

On Sunday morning, there was fresh evidence of the difficulty of trying to heal long-standing racial divisions: racial slurs were spray-painted on the front and side of the brick school building.

BOSTON — When Mayor Raymond Flynn announced at an impromptu news conference last week that a rock-throwing brawl at South Boston High School wasn't racially motivated, bystanders laughed.

Indeed, the roots of conflict in Flynn's old neighborhood seem to have outlasted nearly 20 years of forced busing.

NORTHAMPTON — Organizers and police estimated 3,000 people and their allies gathered Saturday afternoon to celebrate their identity and diversity for the 12th Annual Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Pride March.

Demanding equal rights, a record number of people marched through Northhampton, converging on Pulaski Park for a liberating post-march rally, which included a myriad of performers and speakers from all facets of the community.

"I felt like I could relax, that I was around my own people," Ben Zeman, a bisexual UMass graduate student said.

"Visibility is really important so people don't forget that queer people are still here and still working for their rights," said Meeghan Ziolkowski, who asked to be identified as a queer educator advocate for the Everywomen's Center.

Among the speakers and performers were Toni Brown, an African-American writer, Carrie Ferguson, an a capella singer, Tina D'Elia, a Latina artist and poet, Dave Stevens, a gay man, Laura Goodwin, a sadomasochist and leather advocate, and Mary L. Ford, mayor of Northampton.

"I really appreciated the job the Steering Committee did in getting a wide variety of speakers and performers," Ziolkowski said.

"They really included [transgender] more. They had a few people in drag performing," said Chris Savastano, a gay UMass undergraduate.

Committee focuses on women

Group formed to review University Health Services

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

In response to growing concern over women's health care at University Health Services, a special committee has been formed to investigate.

Chaired by Pamela Gonyer, the director of Health Education at UMass, the women's health committee has been establishing methods of collecting and processing data in order to make recommendations to Health Services.

"[The committee] was formed to study woman's experiences and perceptions of using University Health Services for gynecological care and other forms of women's health services," Gonyer said.

The idea for the committee began in the fall when several graduate and undergraduate students interested in women's health issues contacted Health Services. Gonyer said at that time she was appointed to be the staff member in charge of the committee.

"We want to gather information about women's experiences, look it over carefully, and make possible recommendations for changes in the handling of women's health care, particularly gynecology," Gonyer said.

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Thomas Robinson mandated the committee and charge letters were sent out to prospective committee members. According to Gonyer, Robinson approved the appointees and the group first met last December.

Gonyer said a Project Pulse survey was conducted in early December about gynecological services and another was done in the early spring for contraception, in order to get background information for the committee.

The group meets once a month and have had five meetings this semester, the most recent being last Thursday, according to Gonyer.

"A full review of women's health services has not been done for many years and we felt it was about time," Gonyer said.

She said three subcommittees have already been formed out of the original committee. The subcommittees will be working through the summer and fall to look more in-depth and make further recommendations.

The Consumer Feedback Subcommittee is charged with the task of looking at the ways in which feedback is gathered and used. Because the information is confidential, Gonyer said the group will be looking at summaries of the information to gain ideas about how to redesign the system.

The second subcommittee is developing a comprehensive mail-out survey that will be given to a sample of women who have used the health services in the last year. The survey is being drawn up with help from Student Affairs Research, Information and Systems (SARIS) and will be mailed out in late October, according to Gonyer.

The third subcommittee will be holding focus groups throughout the summer. These groups will be made up of eight to 12 people gathered for a structured discussion about health services.

Gonyer said there will hopefully be about six groups that meet in the summer and they will be made up of different types of women. She said they are trying to contact committee leaders to set this program up.

The original mandate recommended that the committee be finished by May, but Gonyer said they have recommended that they need more time.

The committee also wishes to have students send in information about their health care experiences. This information can be sent to Pam Gonyer in the health education division at University Health Services, Mirran Raphaely in the student government office and Sarah Boy in the Student Affairs office in Whitmore.

Prof. reviews bill restricting shoreline use

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts geology professor said if the United States does not legislate against new construction too close to its shorelines, the price of flood insurance and coastal relief programs will continue to rise.

Professor of Geography and Planning Law Rutherford Platt was the only academic representative at a 25-member conference held in Orlando, Fla. last week to review legislation drafted by Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass.

Platt said the new bill would establish limits on how close to the water's edge new or rebuilt structures may be placed. It appears to be weaker than a similar bill that Kerry had introduced previously, Platt said.

"In May of 1991 the bill passed by a huge majority in the House, but was killed in the Senate by property owner's interests," Platt said. "It's rather discouraging that we are behind where we were three years ago."

Platt said the new version of the bill is weaker because of the power of the property owners.

"At the meeting, property owners declared that everyone who supported the bill is an environmentalist who wants to confiscate private property," Platt said. "I responded that it is widely said that those who oppose the bill are wealthy property owners trying to protect their interests."

Platt said property owners have based their argument against minimum national setbacks of construction on the "taking issue." The taking issue is the Constitutional provision that prevents the federal government from taking property without compensation.

New chancellor greets UMass

Scott promises low tuition, high communication

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

David K. Scott, the University of Massachusetts chancellor-elect, said at a press conference Friday he would try to keep tuition low and communication with students high.

Scott said after he and his family watched the video tape of an open forum he spoke at in late March, Scott said his son said he seemed aloof with the students. Scott's three children, Wendelin, Kelvin and Jeremy, are college students.

"I could see I didn't connect, and I can improve," Scott said. "We want to invite lots of students into the chancellor's house," Scott said of he and his wife.

When Scott was Michigan State's provost from 1986 to 1992, Scott held office hours from 1:30 to 5:30 on Thursday afternoons for two years. Scott said he will have office hours. Realizing that students might be intimidated by Whitmore, Scott said he plans to walk around campus to meet students.

"There is more morale and enthusiasm here, than I found in many universities," Scott said. "I really like the campus and the people. All together it is very exciting."

There are still barriers to access, Scott said. To achieve multiculturalism, Scott said the University must not only aggressively recruit students and staff, but must also work harder to retain.

"People should feel comfortable with different groups on campus," Scott said.

The University must be pro-active with incidents on campus. The unrest from the Rodney King verdict should have been anticipated and prepared for by having forums on the unfairness of the justice system, Scott said.

"Incidents [like Rodney King's] are happening every day to people," Scott said.

Furthermore, there will be open forums for students to discuss racism. Admitting that he has biases, Scott said it is important for people to realize their prejudices and work on them. It will be painful in the beginning for people to discuss their biases, but it must be done before more painful incidents occur, Scott said.

"We must remember that racism is alive and thriving," Scott said.

In addition to having freshmen take a year-long diversity class, at one to two credits, throughout the four years students would take diversity courses related to their major, Scott said.

Since high tuition hurts accessibility, Scott said the University must gain economic support through alumni and businesses. Even during good economic times, the University must cut back on some programs and add others.

But through planning ahead for bad economic times, Scott said the University can avoid freezing salaries and hiring.

Hooker said he visited the campuses of University of California at Los Angeles and Michigan State for two days, where he met with students and faculty.

"When I left the Michigan State campus, I felt we got a special candidate," Hooker said.

Scott's deep understanding of the changes in education and how quickly he understood UMass' problems, was what Hooker said attracted him to this candidate.

International Fair offers taste of diverse cultures

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center was filled with smells, sights and sounds from over 30 different countries during the 15th annual International Fair yesterday.

The day-long fair featured tables with food, products from each nation represented, as well as informational brochures from many of the representatives.

The fair also featured a series of events from different nations, including a Nepal Dance, the breaking of a Pinjata, Hatian Folk Dancing and a fashion show by the Bangladesh Friends Association.

Peter Choo, a junior chemical engineering major from Singapore, helped sell various dishes normally made in Singapore and distribute brochures provided by the Singapore Tourist Promotion Board.

"I like to introduce Singapore to people," Choo said. "Those who have gone there have quite positive impressions impressions, and those who haven't gone believe it is a clean and safe place."

Choo said the food, which included fried noodles and satay, was prepared by a group of about six or seven students from Singapore.

Alma Musanovic, a Foreign Fellow at Mt. Holyoke College, was one of the representatives at a table sponsored by the Friends of Bosnia.

"We are trying to raise people's awareness of what can be done to stop genocide in Bosnia," Musanovic said. "I think people in the Five College Area are very concerned about Bosnia — the response has been excellent."

The Bosnian table also featured a variety of traditional Bosnian foods, including spinach pie, rice dishes and baklava.

Nigar Khatak of the Western Massachusetts Muslim Association in West Springfield prepared much of the food at the Bosnian table.

"[The fair] is a chance for people to learn about Muslim culture," Khatak said.

Donna Butler, a junior sociology major who attended the fair, said she was im-

Bank left in shadows

Few take advantage of Credit Union

By JEFF HOJLO
Collegian Staff

Thousands of people walk through the Student Union every day but the majority of them still do not know about the services that the University of Massachusetts Student Federal Credit Union provides.

Or, worse yet, many don't even know the Credit Union exists.

Members of the student run Credit Union hope to change this, however, saying that the services they provide are geared toward students and there is not the hassle or red tape that most banks give a customer.

"People think we're like any other bank but we're not," said Director of Marketing Mara Eldridge. "We have a $5 one-time fee for members to have an account here, we're students so we understand what students needs are, we offer low rates and we're located right in the center of campus.

"Also, after you graduate from UMass, you can still have an account here," she said.

Despite all the time some of the students put into the Credit Union, they still do not get paid for their efforts. But that doesn't seem to phase these volunteers.

"We all wish we had more time (to work at the Credit Union), said Eldridge. "It's a great job — we have a lot of decision making power to determine how we can best serve students. The best part is that we see the results

Bathrooms to be fixed

By DANIEL BOUCHER
Collegian Staff

Maintenance administrators of the Campus Center/Student Union complex said the bathrooms off the Campus Center concourse will be overhauled over the summer.

The Board of Governors, which serves as a student advisory body to the administration of the building, has complained that the bathrooms are often messy and smell bad.

William Harris, the director of the Campus Center, said the bathrooms are cleaned every night between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m.

He said they cannot be cleaned thoroughly during the day because they are used so often. Over the summer, said Harris, the ventilation will be checked, "to clear the foul air."

The bathrooms have also been vandalized. Toilet tissue dispensers have been ripped off some of the stalls, and some of the stalls' doors have been broken and cannot be securely locked. In the men's room, one of the faucets does not work.

Forrest Davies, the director of Building Services, which administrates maintenance of the Campus Center, said repairs will cost about $30 for each door catch and $50 to replace each dispenser. The money for these items will be budgeted by Auxiliary Services.

More expensive damage gets caused when someone crushes soda cans and jams them into the toilets, clogging them up. Harris and Davies said it costs about $100 to fix it each time, because the toilet has to be taken off the wall.

The Board of Governors, at their weekly meeting last Thursday, also voted to expand the functions of the Food Service Committee.

The committee's chairperson Dan Gordon said the committee's function can be their natural right to guard the welfare of their children," Bulger's statement read.

Chase, a leading opponent of the current school choice program, said school choice is an abuse of power and has created chaos.

"A 40-hour conference session held in June started the program, whereas in Minnesota it took many years for it to be successful," Chase said. "In order for it to be a helpful program in Massachusetts, it will take many years."

Already affected by the school choice program, Susan Szachowicz, chair of the sociology department at Brockton High, said the school has lost students and funding through the program.

"One of the major issues being avoided here today is racial problems," Szachowicz said. "Parents are sending their children to Avon because there is a high percentage of minority students in our high school."

Another concern presented by Bulger is that students are choosing the program for schools that are more convenient to attend, sports programs and social reasons.

Lenonard Lubinsky, superintendent of the Erving school union, said he has not chosen the program, and does not support efforts to make it mandatory throughout the Commenwealth of Massachusetts.

"I believe the program is a distraction from the efforts to make better school systems," Lubinsky said.

The forum continued into the afternoon as roundtable dicussions were held, and education administrators were able to ask questions of the speakers.

The slurs, directed at Blacks, were quickly covered by a coat of beige paint. No arrests had been made.

"I'm very disturbed about it," Flynn said of the grafitti. "Obviously, that's why we're giving a message that any kind of slurs or insults directed at any group of people is unacceptable and it hurts."

Flynn said some of the students he met with don't realize the offensiveness of racial epithets and, "don't mean it in their heart." He said he told them that "racial slurs of any kind cannot be tolerated."

The mayor also said he corrected "a widely held view by parents... that there's an avalanche of weapons in the school."

Flynn and school officials have insisted the weapons problem has been exaggerated. Nonetheless, when nearly 1,000 students return to school this week, they will find beefed-up security and metal detectors.

Only the school's seniors are to return Monday. Juniors will return Tuesday and the rest of the school on Wednesday.

Tensions had been building for days, with residents complaining at a community meeting about vandalism and a fight at a subway station in which one youth was arrested for carrying a machete.

Massage eases tension

Students earning 'hands-on' credits

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

A client gets a relaxing massage at Shiatsu Studio in Amherst where students can get credit and hands on experience.

By FRANCIS ZERA
Collegian Staff

Students have the opportunity to earn credit for learning massage techniques, healing, and for searching your inner self. Interested students should see Janet Murphy at Amherst's Shiatsu Studio.

Murphy, who said she "teaches because it pleases me," strives to "show people that there are other ways of seeing reality."

Murphy has been practicing Shiatsu for 20 years, and has operated the Shiatsu Studio on Main Street in Amherst for the past six. She said she sees the technique as a "great window to look into life."

Shiatsu massage is part of an entire healing process, said Murphy.

"A person needs to take time out of every day to do nothing and relax," Murphy said. This alleviates stress as well as allowing the body time to heal itself, she said.

Murphy treats "structural injuries" to the body, as well as providing the traditional massage therapy.

"There is great healing power in the simplicity of the human touch," Murphy said. "Shiatsu takes this profound awareness and codifies it with the understanding of the natural energy of the human body."

The program Murphy teaches is a sequential three-year course of study, she said. This allows her to tailor the program to the needs of the students.

Murphy said she "improves as she goes along," and the learning process is a mutual one between Murphy and her students.

It is possible to attend the Shiatsu Studio's program and earn credit through an independent study, according to Albey Reiner, director of the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration Program at the University.

An interested student needs to discuss their intentions with their advisor first, said Reiner. If a student is interested in a BDIC major, they should visit the office in Bartlett Hall.

Murphy said her program is open to anyone who is interested, not only to students. Shiatsu provides her students with a "more complete view of themselves and the way that they live," she added.

Hayley Mermelstein, a UMass alumnus and a student of Murphy's, said she first learned of Murphy's program when Murphy guest lectured at a class she was taking.

Mermelstein said she found Murphy's class "demanding," adding that there was an extensive time requirement outside of the weekly classes. She now has her own practice, but keeps in close contact with Murphy, mainly to keep up a sense of "community" between local practitioners.

Murphy's brochure for her studio says Shiatsu "can also be used as a consciousness tool, a way to uncover a deeper awareness of one's self, emotional life, and one's place in Creation. Studying Shiatsu is a study of oneself."

Reality isn't around the corner — it's right there with you

"Reality, what a concept." — Robin Williams

The first time I heard that, I thought I understood it. It was obviously just drug humor, picking on people who've done a wee bit too much acid. I have to admit, lately I've come to see that little joke in a wholly different light.

We're in college now, presumably expecting to graduate within a few years. We are, if your lives are anything like mine, having a slew of new, different, exciting experiences. Things at UMass get pretty weird, if not downright surreal. We have our little experiences, be they with drugs, sex, romance, friendships or whatever. I have had a number of days that have ended in ways I never imagined on waking that morning. This is our world; sometimes it seems like this way of living is all we'll ever know. The late-night discussions when we solve the world's problems, the parties, the occasional personal disasters — these are the things that make up our lives. Classes seem like an incidental inconvenience much of the time; we're here for the life. But we keep getting reminded, by our advisors, our parents and each other, that this is not the Real World.

Ah yes, the Real World. That specter that looms over us all, whether we face it with dread or joy. Sooner or later, we have to finish up with whatever degrees we get and then get not a job but a Career. From thence to find a wife or husband, and more than likely settle down to raising a little Family. How nice.

Michael

I have a few problems with this line of thought. Who the Hell decides what is Real? Obviously, high school is not the Real World. High school is what you do to get ready for college. College, in turn, is what you do to get ready for a career. You have a career so you can support your family and have all the nice things you want, so you can do other things when you grow too old to work. Does it strike anyone besides me as somewhat odd that according to the model we're shown from childhood, each stage of life is geared to make the next stage of getting ready (for something else) easier?

What exactly is it that makes one perception of reality more or less valid than another? To many people, the life of a musician, for example, isn't "real." It's irresponsible, a waste, etc. Why? What is it about being a middle-level personnel manager that is so much more worthy? They're both chasing some kind of dream, even if they are very different visions of what they want. Maybe one just more honestly realizes that there is a vision there.

What about relationships? Everyone talks about emotional growth, how the things they felt "back then" weren't actually real at all. OK, maybe they weren't, and maybe the things people feel now aren't either. But they definitely feel real at the time. If you hurt you hurt, and if you're happy you're happy. It's not like you hit a certain age and suddenly things become real. I know people 50 years old engaged in relationships they know probably won't work. I know others who still don't know who they are or what they want, be it from a relationship or life itself.

Then there's drugs, being an escape, a waste. Maybe. I don't advocate anybody doing anything because I say so. But what sounds like a greater appreciation of the world is going on: laying under a tree, with a head full of love for beauty, being amazed at all the things you find yourself thinking; or working like a slave at a job you can barely tolerate, because you're looking for that next big promotion, with the added stress and tension that goes with it?

Take advantage of what you're doing. Take seriously what you will. Enjoy yourself, make the most of your life. Because the real world is wherever you are.

Chancellor has work cut out

The new chancellor has been hired and many have gotten what they wanted. Basically the University, which is like a little United States, complete with political and bureaucratic backtrack, was simply not ready for a female chancellor, and surely wasn't ready for an African-American woman at that.

For many it is simply a matter of fear. Many didn't believe she would make it as far as she did in the selection process. So many people, including the Undergraduate Student Senate, were so threatened by another human being that they wanted to reopen the search. I don't know what gave them the idea we all wanted it to be reopened because I sure didn't.

Malkes
GOMES

Several newspaper articles furtively tried to make Claudia Mitchell-Kernan look incompetent, but then again this is nothing new in America over the last 500 years, after the so-called discovery. I hope one day those who have created this fear and feel threatened by having people of color in positions of power are able to overcome the barrier which they themselves have created. One must carry a lot of power for another to feel threatened by the color of skin.

The way I see it as a person of African ancestry, I can deal with my community because that is where I came from, but I can also deal with the European community because like most Asian, Latin, African-American and Native American people living in America I have learned about Europeans. On the other hand, most Europeans can deal with their own community, but many cannot deal with the minority community because they don't know how and have not been dominated for 500 years.

Well, the crime is done, so we must live with it and move on. We all know the new chancellor has his work cut out for him. He is like Clinton because he has inherited a mess from his predecessors and we shall see how he handles it. Many of us will be watching very carefully. We as students must give our input and our criticism. I believe we can talk to the administrators, but we must remember that many in Whitmore are skilled in the art of politics and look out for their own welfare. We can attend meetings with them, but our duty as students should remain with fellow students, although some students do not always have the best interest of all the students, but would fit in well in Whitmore.

I hope before September arrives the University looks into ways to increase funds for the Collegiate Committee for Education of Black and other Minority Students and the Bilingual Collegiate Program, which are in desperate need of more funds and I don't mean an extra $5,000 every three years. I know there is a grade A staff in the CCEBMS program but they don't have grade A backing. The staffs of these operations are some of the lowest-paid and the facilities are some of the worst on campus. A perfect example is the falling ceiling in the Cape Verdean Student Alliance office in New Africa House.

I also hope the University locates a bigger space for New World Theater, now residing in two small offices smaller than a double single. New World Theater has been asking for a larger space since 1987.

In a sense, UMass has neglected its children. Whitmore sits like a big house while these programs sit like shacks. In modern times, Whitmore resembles the suburbs and these programs resemble the ghettos. If the University were committed to multiculturalism these programs would be better taken care of.

September brings a whole new year with a whole new road and I hope a few people are going to work hard in building this road because the students will be back.

A 700 on SATs isn't asking much

Thank you John Calipari for the compliment you gave me and probably 95 percent of the University [Collegian, May 6]. By saying Tyrone Weeks and Edgar Padilla are "smart kids," you called me (and again about 95 percent of UMass) geniuses. Weeks and Padilla failed to get over a 700 on the SATs. Yet the coach of our basketball team still thinks they are "smart kids." By this standard, I am a genius.

Coach, could you write a recommendation for me when I apply for a job after I graduate? I can picture it now. I would be finishing an interview and the interviewer would say, "Thank you, Mr. Keefner, we need to check your references and then you will hear from us." Here I jump up excitedly and say, "Did I mention that John Calipari, head coach of the UMass Minutemen, thinks I'm a genius?!"

Better yet, coach, could you tell Whitmore to change all my grades to As, as a genius deserves nothing less than As?

Obviously, these two requests were sarcastic. But what is not so funny is that, to my knowledge, there are at least three UMass athletes (either here now or coming next semester) who didn't get over a 700 on the SATs. I imagine that these "students" are also on scholarship. Is this the right message that we want to send to high school kids: "Don't worry about learning anything; just be really good at a sport and you will easily get into a first-class school. You probably won't even have to pay for it."

A 700 is not asking a great amount from someone who went through high school. I thought people were accepted or rejected by this University on the basis of their education. I guess not.

Whitmore, please send my revised grades as soon as possible so I can post them on the refrigerator!

Skin cancer can happen to you

UMass is gorgeous in spring. I love being outside, but I'll enjoy the warmth covered with sunscreen and clothes. Cancer does happen and sooner than we may think.

I had a mole removed over winter break and found it was a malignant melanoma, a form of skin cancer. I was lucky because it was removed in the early stages. Early detection greatly increases survival rate. Not all moles are cancerous, but those of irregular shape, large size or changing colors may have potential to become cancerous.

There are free screening sessions involving quick visual examination by a dermatologist. Avoiding ultra violet ray contact is the best for prevention. Are you light-skinned, blond and freckled? Think twice about getting burn after burn. If you have darker skin, you are not immune. Men are just as susceptible as women. Do you or a friend have a suspicious-looking mole? Take the time to get it checked. For more information, contact the Massachusetts chapter of the American Cancer Society.

Déjà vu at UPenn paper

Last month The Daily Pennsylvanian, the student newspaper at the University of Pennsylvania, met an all too familiar fate when a group of students stole 14,000 copies of the paper to protest the paper's alleged racism.

Following the theft, a group claiming to represent "The Black Community" left behind a sign indicating it is unwilling to accept "the blatant and voluntary perception of institutionalized racism against the Black Community by the DP (Daily Penn) and by the University."

Dan
WETZEL

Apparently the community was fed up with DP columnist Gregory Pavlik, who (gasp) is a conservative and has been critical of affirmative action and Martin Luther King Jr. Because these students disagreed with Pavlik, they took it upon themselves to stop the flow of information between the DP and its readers. The DP, like the Collegian, is independent from the university financially and editorially.

While the national media has focused on the lukewarm response of Penn President Sheldon Hackney, a Clinton nominee for the National Endowment for the Humanities, the deplorable actions of the students themselves deserve examination and condemnation.

Penn students are adults and their actions cannot just be shrugged off as childish pranks. This is an Ivy League school, rumored to educate our nation's most intelligent and hard-working students. Those who have enrolled have climbed high up the social and educational ladder in our country.

Yet instead of using their skills, intelligence and energy to debate Pavlik or to work at the DP, they engaged in mindless, immature and illegal behavior. They broke laws instead of using reason. They used force instead of thought.

Even more compelling is that the actions came from Black students, who should have full appreciation for freedom of the press. The abolitionist newspapers of the 1800s paved the way for unpopular, and at the time politically incorrect, notions, such as the inhumanity of the slave system. But instead of recognizing the validity of the free marketplace of ideas and the ability of individuals to decide for themselves what is ignorance and what is truth, the students chose to enforce their own censorship policy.

"If I agree with an opinion then it deserves to be heard, if not it should be muffled," appears to be their reasoning. Maybe I thought too highly of Penn students to think they could understand simple logic and fairness. If these are our nation's finest students, we are in trouble.

President Hackney proved to be the stereotypical, weak-spined administrator, all too common on campuses today. Fearful of being branded a racist by condemning "The Black Community," Hackney originally cowered and defended the thieves by claiming the papers "were free." A few days later he came to his senses and offered the limp response that "taking newspapers is wrong," but that the concerns of Penn's minority community were "serious and legitimate."

No concerns legitimize shutting down the press. No one person should be allowed to decide what should or should not be read. It is particularly disheartening that this would occur at a university, whose mission is a commitment to open dialogue. To retreat from his principles is a disgrace and certainly not an action of a man worthy of federal appointment.

Of course, while Hackney's behavior is a disgrace at Penn, it would have been a dream come true on this campus. As weak-minded and two-faced as Hackney was, he did show the ability to, eventually, stand up for a group decried as "politically incorrect." At the University of Massachusetts we are not blessed with such mediocrity.

At UMass, the law of the land is never enforced equally upon all students. Even the most obvious and occasionally violent crimes, if done for political reasons, are not condemned. For the all-encompassing politically correct movement, anything goes, no matter who gets hurt.

Of course, there is possibly no place on earth where cowardice is more at home than the third floor of Whitmore.

feel," Savastano said, stressing that some marchers remained at the rally until 8 p.m.

A topic of contention for some and celebration for others was the inclusion of the term transgender to the March title. According to Zeman, some community members were angered that the Steering Committee made the change without holding an open forum to discuss the issue.

"A lot of people were pissed that they didn't put it to an open forum," Zeman said.

Others, however, including Zeman, appreciated the Steering Committee's efforts in recognizing diversity in the community, while also avoiding confrontation and disunity similar to the dispute which occurred two years ago over whether to include bisexuals in the march.

"The most important thing to me that happened was that the word transgender was added. I'm very pleased that the Steering Committee took the initiative to add it because if we had put it to an open forum, transgender people would have been on trial," Zeman said.

"I think it was a bold step that I really appreciated," Ziolkowski added.

According to several march participants, the number of anti-march protestors gets smaller every year. This year there were three.

Waving signs splashed with biblical passages, they stood on the steps of city hall, outshouted and outnumbered by men and women who countered with biblical quotes of their own, and public displays of affection.

Spring Concert '93: a scorching success

By ADAM GOULSTON
Collegian Staff

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN
The Wailers engaged in a mighty groove at the Spring Concert yesterday.

Moshpits? Sure. Expensive food? You bet. Sunburn? Unfortunately. A bunch of songs you've never heard before? Well, that's a given. Come on kids, this is Spring Concert 1993 — a well-balanced combination of beautiful weather and great music. What more could a UMass student ask for? From noon to 7:30, the Campus Pond provided backdrop for the best way to spend a Mother's Day without dear old mom at your side.

UMass' favorite illegitimate sons, the Canine Bastards opened the show to a small yet rapidly increasing crowd just after the clock struck noon. Not surprisingly, the Bastards proved that it is indeed possible for any band to sound impressive if they're wired into a big enough sound system. Despite their surprising lack of matching outfits, the dance moves and charm made the Canine Bastards an entertaining presence as always.

As the folks by the Polygram van continued to draw a mob to their mounds and mounds of free stuff, one of their bands, New York City's Quicksand turned the voltage up. The hardcore quartet wasted no time in tearing into a loud and powerful set of songs off their first full-length album, Slip.

"It was a bit hard to hear up there," said lead singer Walter Schreifels, "but we had a good time." Indeed the sound was a bit off as Schreifels self-described "screaming at the top of my lungs" lost a bit in the translation to an outdoor arena. The band appeared slightly off but nonetheless blazed through their songs with reckless abandon, the only way they know how.

Quicksand giving the stage to Richie Havens is something akin to the Reverend Al Sharpton passing the altar to the Pope. It was storytime at UMass as Mr. Havens exuded a presence of magnificent proportions.

Sitting on stage in his stool, guitar in hand, black robe gracing his shoulders, Havens kind voice and features gave the Pond a retro feel. It was Woodstock again. The crowd hushed as Havens recited his various tales and followed them with songs which held a certain eeriness in their serenity.

In one set of actions, Havens seemed to enrapture his audience all the while existing in his own dream world. Highlighting the longest set of the afternoon was the captivating, "Just Like A Woman." In Havens' words, "in the nineties, we're right back to the fifties." For the time Havens graced the stage, nothing could have been truer.

The mood swung from Woodstockian to Jamaican as the late Bob Marley's backup band, The Wailers moved the crowd to some classic reggae tunes, providing the best opportunity for dancing. As the scent of marijuana became all the more pervasive, The Wailers grooved and satisfied the now substantial crowd.

Gaining national acclaim and a spot on this summer's Lollapalooza lineup may be too much of a burden for Amherst's Dinosaur Jr. to bear. One may have expected an enthusiastic and inspired set from a band which has seen more Spring Concerts than most of the crowd for which they performed. In that sense, the set was a disappointment. But with reclusive J Mascis at the helm, anything can happen.

Dino covered some favorites including "Freak Scene" and "Start Choppin'" but for the most part showed little energy or character as they went about their business. This did not prevent multiple moshpits, crowd surfers and a generally appeased crowd.

Thankfully, Naughty By Nature more than compensated for Dinosaur Jr.'s lack of character. Lead hip-hopper Trech was nothing short of obscene and he probably wouldn't have it any other way. Multiple turntables, profuse obcenity and a driving bassline capped a thoroughly appealing set.

As Trech informed the crowd, "if you feel that [expletive] vibe, that [expletive] is in the heart." Indeed the [expletive] was in the hearts of many this Mother's Day afternoon. Spring Concert 1993 did not disappoint.

Triple Threat scores a grand slam

Triple Threat Tour
The Vertex
May 4, 1993

It was a triple threat, being trapped in a lost city with no morals, dumbfounded in a tainted Garden of Eden. The Vertex supplied the ammunition for this mindscape last Tuesday night by featuring the Triple Threat Tour comprised of three bands: No Morals, Lost City and Edan.

Dreading, yet, another onslaught of cliche cheese metal treachery, the scarce audience that did brave the threat were granted a rewarding performance by bands that classify themselves under a more prestigious genre.

With Edan's frontman Edan Everly, son of Don Everly from the Everly Brothers and drummer Frank Avalon Jr. and Lost City's diverse line-up consisting of Brits and Canadians, both bands proved to have unplaceable sounds attributed to a variety of influences.

Lost City sounded somewhat like a cross between Kansas, Triumph, the Scorpions, Joan Baez and Pink Floyd. While sporting bell bottoms and '70s-type prints, the Gothic keyboard lines combined with finger picking of a plugged-in acoustic, an explosive drum solo, impeccable vocal harmonies and the wrap-up with a cover of "Thirty Days in the Hole." Lost City found themselves providing Edan an enticing atmospheric mode to begin their set with.

Edan, a struggling band of aspiring musicians influenced by everything from Motown and hardcore to Lawerence Welk, is being managed by Richard Cole, who at one time had worked with Led Zeppelin. The band lit up the stage with their self-enveloping analogous lyrical patterns, heavy distortion guitar solos and funky bass lines.

Singer Edan Everly swallowed up the stage with his raspy vocals that swarmed around the melodies like a batch of bumble bees on a garden of daisies.

While attempting to classify the band's sound into a confined agenda, frustration and difficulty arose. With a honky tonk, punk-funk, soul stirring sound as such, the possibilities seemed endless.

Two thumbs up for these two new bands on the horizon that value individuality, originality and self-fulfillment but are unfortunately, clustered in with a plethora of bands geared towards user-friendly lyrics and onstage poseur-dom in search of recognition for a style they weren't the first to fabricate.

Halloween, Buffalo lead best of theater awards

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Staff

SHAWN MCDONNELL / COLLEGIAN ILLUSTRATION

Distinguished performers from Spring 1993 include (l-r): Paul Anthony Spatarella ("American Buffalo"), Laurie Ciarametaro ("Cloud Nine"), Timothy E. Blake (center-top, "Joe Turner's Come and Gone"), Ted Neeley (center-bottom, "Jesus Christ Superstar"), Lynda Newton ("70 Scenes of Halloween") and Carl Anderson ("Jesus Christ Superstar").

As another semester comes clattering to a halt, it is time once again to celebrate the Theatre of Months Past with the Sporadically Appropriate Bi-Annual Mac Awards, a Collegian tradition for what seems like months.

Following last semester's Mac Awards, certain among you were kind enough to point out areas for possible improvement, in simple, biologically specific messages, frequently attached to rocks. In light of this response, I have decided to significantly lengthen this semester's "ceremony," leaving no category unaccounted for and no one unsatisfied. Let us begin.

The Spring 1993 Mac Award for Outstanding Costume Designer goes to Nicole Higgins of American Buffalo, if only for selecting the gloomy hanging raincoat sported by weasel-like Mamet baddie Paul Anthony Spatarella. The combination of Spatarella's performance and Higgins' spot-on design made a disturbing figure disturbingly real.

Outstanding Light Designer: Matthew Richards of 70 Scenes of Halloween, whose moody bulbs transformed a sterile yuppie apartment into a theatrical funhouse. Particularly memorable: the shadows of hanging vines which invaded "Joan and Jeff's" living room.

Outstanding Sound Designer: Lori Dawson of Halloween. What can one say about a sound designer who contrasts chirping birds with the Psycho soundtrack?

Outstanding Set Designer: I bow to no one in my respect for whoever designed the enormous staircase in American Buffalo, but this award must go to Larry Novakov-Lawlor, for the brilliant urban panorama that engulfed the Rand stage in Joe Turner's Come and Gone. The production designs in UMass Theatre are rarely better than those at the Rand, and never better than Lawlor's work this semester.

Outstanding Musical Director: A shiny new trophy to Peter Fernandez, the composing, orchestrating whiz behind Cloud Nine's all-singing, all-dancing, all-alternative-lifestyles finale. A companion award for Outstanding Choreographer to Kym Moore, who coached the Cloud crowd's hoofing. The combination of their work made for one of the semester's most memorable (and hummable) moments.

While I'm on the subject, my award for Outstanding Supporting Actress goes to Cloud's double-duty dame Laurie Ciarametaro. Playing a homosexual man and his mother, Ciarametaro turned in two sensational performances — either one of which would have netted her this award.

Kudos also to Ciarametaro's right-hand man, Micah Hollingsworth, but this semester's Outstanding Supporting Actor award must go to Paul Anthony Spatarella of American Buffalo. As the center of this semester's most gutsy and daring production, Spatarella managed to make his hard-luck character more than an open wound. Resisting the standard audience sympathy, Spatarella was a complex bundle of contradictions: deceptively soft-sopken, fanatical, dislikable — but ultimately very real. That's what great acting is all about.

Next up is my brand spanking new What The Hell, Let's Give Her An Award award, which goes to the consistently excellent Jennifer Costello (late of Cloud Nine, Women of Trachis and Buried Child). Costello has been runner-up for Featured Actress three times now, and frankly deserves some recognition — even if it is a transparent, tailor-made prize such as this one. Congratulations, Jen!

The award for Outstanding Female Star has been deleted this semester, on the grounds that there was a distinct lack of starring roles for women and I would simply have given the award to last semester's winner, Lynda Newton, for her spirited performance in 70 Scenes of Halloween. Since I always seem to be singling Newton out for some sort of praise, I have decided to simply rule her ineligible before she is set upon by jealous rivals.

My newly-established Award for Outstanding Achievement in the Field of Acting Excellence (Non-male) goes to Lynda Newton, for her spirited performance in 70 Scenes of Halloween.

Well, the competition was particularly fierce in our next category, the award for Most Unnerving Clergyman, with no less than nine candidates battling and praying for first place (I only report this stuff, kids). In the end I was left with two coves in a dead heat. One: Patrick Brennan, as the ever-so-slightly bonkers Rev. Crisparkle, who killed at least one night in the choose-your-own-killer musical The Mystery of Edwin Drood. Two: David Bedella as the bristlingly evil Caiaphas in Jesus Christ Superstar, a man whose roaring voice could split stone and part seas. In the spirit of Drood, you can pick your own winner. I'm out of this one.

After discounting stage and screen legends Ted Neeley and Carl Anderson of Jesus Christ Superstar (who are not, strictly speaking, students), I was left with but one choice for Outstanding Male Star: Timothy E. Blake of Joe Turner's Come and Gone. As a released prisoner trying to restart his life and find his "song," Blake walked a tightrope between anger and hope and never fell.

Outstanding Theatre Without Words: Teach (Paul Anthony Spatarella) trashing the junk-shop in American Buffalo. Runner up: The Beast (Star L. Barry) rising eerily from the ground in 70 Scenes of Halloween.

Outstanding Booked-In Production: Jesus Christ Superstar, Tony Christopher's lively new staging at the Mullins Center, which included among its strengths the perform.ances of Ted Neeley and Carl Anderson (late of the Broadway production and the film version).

Which brings us to the big three. My award for Outstanding Comedy goes to Sabrina Hamilton's staging of 70 Scenes of Halloween. While members of the company may disagree with this classification, the truth is inescapable: this show, about a yuppie couple plagued by eccentric demons, is downright hilarious. There may be a "message" about relationships, but it was the insane humor which brought me back to this a second time. Where else can you see an actor throwing a dead chicken around the stage?

Our remaining two "biggy" awards go to Nathan Phillip Schechter, the Outstanding Director of the Outstanding Drama, American Buffalo. Not only were Schechter's production notes inspired and profound, but his direction revealed brilliant attention to character and detail. It would have been all too easy to turn this play into a parable about greed or trust, but Schechter saw more in David Mamet's text than a model for living. Mamet once said that "one thing makes all the difference in the world: knowing what the f—k you're talking about." Few directors, I suspect, ever know anything as well as Schechter knows this play.

Finally, this semester's "ceremony" could not be complete without my award for Most Inexplicably Amusing Non-human, which goes to the gruff, growly Star L. Barry of 70 Scenes of Halloween. There is something very entertaining about hearing an enormous wolf inviting people to Dairy Queen, and in my book it deserves an award.

(of our hard work) immediately - that can get pretty addicting."

The Credit Union received its charter on March 11, 1975 through the efforts of students, an examiner from the National Credit Union and an independent consultant. When the Credit Union (insured by the National Credit Union Association) opened its doors on March 31 of that year, there were doubts as to whether or not an all-student, nine-member board of directors (elected annually) could successfully run a federal credit union. But 18 years later, the Credit Union continues to provide the same services it did when its doors were first opened.

Some of these services include share (savings) and share draft (checking) accounts as well as low-interest loans for the purchase of school-related items, cars and other things. The Credit Union also sponsors guaranteed student loans through Chemical Bank.

"This has been a success for 18 years because of the dedication of students," said Eldridge, a junior business major. "It's a grass roots idea that really makes a difference financially in students lives."

Recently, the Board of Directors, which was recently elected on March 6, traveled to Washington, D.C. for the National Credit Union Conference. Eldridge thinks that not only was this a fun experience but also a very informative one.

"It was very beneficial because we are a student credit union and we were able to mingle with professionals," she said. "Listening to what they had to say gave us a lot of ideas for how we can better run the UMass Credit Union."

Although there are some faculty advisors for the Credit Union, Eldridge cautions that the supervisors are used mostly as resource advisors which are called upon when needed or when there is a problem. Being a student run organization, the Credit Union members are constantly learning and they do have their occasional problems.

"One problem is that we have no automatic teller machines which is inconvenient to many students," she said. "We're currently working on efforts to get ATMs but it's not feasible now."

All Credit Union volunteers are members of the Credit Union and all start as tellers, a position that requires five to six hours per week. After this position, which they must serve for one semester, volunteers may choose to apply for managerial positions or choose to serve on one of several committees. They may also run for a position on the Board of Directors, which requires up to a 20 hour/week time commitment.

"After the initial training period of the teller position, students are ready to join a committee, which requires a greater time commitment," said Eldridge. "Some or the committees we have include: loans, collections, marketing, accounting and human resources."

Although many people already volunteer for the Credit Union, Eldridge encourages students to volunteer their time not only for the experience but also for the interpersonal skills you develop and the people you can meet.

"Volunteering at the Credit Union is a great experience for anyone looking to go into banking or business after graduation," she said. "But the best part about it is the people you get to know - friends that you'll always keep in touch with."

expanded to inspect the service provided by the Campus Center Hotel, as well as food outlets.

The Campus Center Hotel brings in revenues of about $1.1 million. The hotel's expenses run about $700,000 per year.

The profit generated by the hotel, along with the arcade, vending machines and University Store, helps meet the expenses of the Campus Center and Student Union.

shorelines

Platt also said, however, the United States Supreme Court has already ruled that it is legal for the federal government to "impose reasonable restrictions on the use of private land in hazardous locations."

Platt said many property owners are unaware that houses built too close to the shoreline will inevitably wash away in a storm.

"Many people do not understand the physical nature of the coastal process," he said. "They blame their problems on a core of corporations or on government actions or inactions."

Platt said the rising sea level is a major contributor to coastal erosion and that a law regulating construction would help protect investors from the harmful effects of erosion.

"Erosion is inevitable because the sea level continues to rise. Even a small rise in the sea level contributes substantially to coastal erosion on many shorelines," Platt said. "Right now we are seeing the phenomenon of elevated houses standing in the water as the shoreline erodes out from under them, stranding the house out in the surf zone.

"A reasonable setback limitation would be beneficial to anyone who is planning to invest in coastal property," Platt said.

Disconnecting your phone service has never been easier.

Now there's an easy way to disconnect your phone service. It's automated, and you can do it from a touch-tone phone anywhere in the New England Telephone area. To place an order to disconnect your service just call 1 800 244-3737 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. weekdays, and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays.

Here's how it works. After you call, you'll be asked to enter your telephone number and customer code. This code is the three-digit number that appears after your telephone number on the Summary of Account page of your bill. Without this code the transaction can't be completed.

If you use this system, your final bill will be sent to your existing billing address. So remember to file a change of address card with the post office.

Call 1 800 244-3737. We'll be happy to disconnect you.

distinguished visitors program

The Distinguished Visitors Program needs your help in choosing our speaker lineup for Fall '93

distinguished visitors program

The Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) is a student run RSO which is funded by the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). Our mission is to bring lecturers to the UMass campus from many different backgrounds in the hope of encouraging critical thought. In past semesters we have sponsored lectures by John Updike; Chuck D; Angela Davis; and Deborah Tannen to name a few. NOW, as we begin to choose for the fall semester we would welcolme your comments on this survey.

Please take a moment to check any of the names below that you feel would be a good choice for our lineup. Send or bring this survey to The Distinguished Visitors Program, Box 113, c/o The Student Activities Office, 416 Student Union Building. BEFORE Thursday May 13th. THANK YOU!!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): An excellent day for taking care of details and answering overdue correspondence. Be prompt to job interviews. Romance will work out fine if you stand your ground.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A period of solitude sheds valuable light on your situation. The sunny weather brings out the best in you, be sure to spend time outdoors. A picnic in the near future is a good idea.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your plans get a jump start, thanks to an intuitive decision or well timed communication. You and a friend can begin anew if you build on trust. Say what you mean.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You enjoy new financial security, thanks to someone's help. Delegate routine work tasks in order to devote more time to your personal life. Creativity will help you get what you want.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Friends may be more helpful than family members today. Follow an expert's advice where insurance matters are concerned. Take a competitor's claim with a grain of salt.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A project could hit a snag today. Your willingness to be patient, supportive and flexible pulls you through. Your professional ambitions take center stage.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Planning is the key to greater success. An important business or personal relationship takes on a new dimension. Be prepared for surprises both at work and at home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good day for tying up loose ends. Residential or work enterprises can be pushed along. Back to work today: good thing it won't last much longer.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An upbeat mood makes this quality time for your family. A new project has everyone full of enthusiasm. Other people are drawn by your positive attitude.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Communications linked to financial or residential matters are favored. People become more receptive when you talk to them privately. Sticking to traditional methods helps you reach your goals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The favors or funds you want become available today. You see eye-to-eye to VIP's. New financial benefits are part of the future. Romance deepens when you and mate share secrets.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Give a business partnership a second chance. Time and patience will put you on top financially. Avoid acting pushy with bank officials. A deal could fall apart if you try to rush things.

trying to hold on to their sense of neighborhood. They say they're getting a bad rap because the media are quicker to report violence against Blacks by Whites than those against Whites by Blacks.

Senate President William Bulger, who lives in South Boston, was among those saying police pay more attention to incidents in which Whites attack Blacks than those in which Whites are the victims. But Flynn and other authorities insist police investigate all civil-rights cases.

The outburst at the high school Thursday capped nearly a week of heightening racial tensions reminiscent of the early days of court-ordered desegregation, when Black students who were bused to school in South Boston were pelted by stones.

City officials met and held community meetings with parents and students throughout the city all weekend. The school, closed Friday, will reopen to seniors on Monday, with other students gradually returning on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Officials said they would add security officers inside the school, station Boston police outside and use hand-held metal detectors to screen students for weapons.

"South Boston has been going through an era of change," said Martin Walsh, director of the Boston office of the U.S. Justice Department's Community Relations Service, and a veteran of the 1974 busing crisis. "The majority of people have been able to adjust and adapt. But in any community, you have to worry about those who may disagree with what is happening."

South Boston residents blame outsiders, including students bused to school there, for recent criminal incidents.

"The elderly are afraid," said Monica Walsh, 51, who works in an antique school near the high school.

"This hasn't got anything to do with race," she said. "We're not racist and never were. I'm sure there are racists, but nobody I know."

Boston City Councilor Albert "Dapper" O'Neil blamed the conflict not on racism, but on "social-planning, liberal do-gooders" who uprooted children from their home communities.

"In 1974, I was right that forced busing would never work in this city," O'Neil said.

John J. Kerrigan, who was chairman of the Boston School Committee in 1974, said the violence then and now stemmed from "a social experiment that was wrong and was pushed down the public's throat."

Anti-busing sentiments also remain strong in the neighborhood.

"Next are they going to force White guys to marry Blacks?" one White 17 year-old South Boston High School student asked.

But Blacks responded that the problem isn't resistance to change. It's racism, pure and simple.

"It's the whole South Boston, the entire prejudiced South Boston, and they are proud of it, too," said Kion Thomas, 15, a freshman at South Boston High School who is Black. "It's probably good that it broke out so people can see."

UMass seeded 11th after loss at Army

MATT KAHN / COLLEGIAN

Attacker Mark Millon takes the ball upfield in recent game play. The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team dropped their final regular season game of the year to Army, 15-7 at West Point. The Gorillas are the eleventh seed in the NCAA Division I lacrosse tournament.

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

Saturday afternoon, with a convincing 15-7 win over the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, the U.S. Military Academy assured themselves of a bid in the NCAA Division I lacrosse tournament and left the Gorillas' seeding in the 12-team field hanging in mid-air.

When the Gorillas landed Sunday evening, they found themselves the number 11 seed in the tournament. They will get a re-match against the Hofstra Flying Dutchmen this Saturday at Hofstra Stadium in Hempstead, N.Y. Hofstra handed UMass it's worst loss of the season, defeating the Gorillas 16-8 on April 3.

The winner of that quarterfinal will travel to Syracuse, N.Y. to face the second-seeded Orangemen of Syracuse University, who also defeated UMass this season.

The Gorillas had been assured by tournament officials that a win over Army, coupled with their 8-6 triumph over Brown last Wednesday for the New England championship, would assure them the number five seed and a home game against 12th-seeded Notre Dame.

But the Cadets, who were uncertain about their tournament chances, reeled off two long strings of unanswered scores — 5-0 in the first quarter and 7-0 in the third — to assure themselves a return to the NCAAs for the first time since 1987. The Cadets are seeded eighth and will host ninth-seeded Maryland.

UMass, who closed their regular season at 10-4, scored off the opening face-off when Sam Joseph won the draw and fed senior attacker Mark Millon. The Cadets, however, allowed no more UMass scores until there were five minutes remaining in the first half.

Army got two scores in under a minute from Eric Waltz and Phil Mandry to take the lead for good, 2-1, in the first. Three more scores in the last three minutes of the first quarter gave the Cadets a 5-1 lead.

"Army knew they had to win this game to get in," Garber said. "They played with a lot of heart and enthusiasm. We scored first and then we relaxed, and they didn't."

After an unassisted score by Todd Butler put Army up 6-1, the Gorillas regained some important momentum in the second quarter. Millon scored again and Mike Valente notched an unassisted goal with five seconds left in the half to cut the lead to 6-3.

"I remember thinking, 'we're only down 6-3 and we didn't play great,'" Garber recalled.

Then the roof fell in on UMass.

Army's advantage in ground balls (41 to 31) and offesnsive execution (35 of 41 Cadet shots were on net) caught up with the Gorillas, and the result was a 7-0 third quarter — by far, UMass' least inspiring performance of the season. Steve Heller, who led all scorers with five points (four goals, one assist) scored twice in the third and tucked in Army's eighth unanswered goal early in the fourth, putting the game on ice and prompting an "overrated" chant from some of the 1,754 fans on hand.

UMass midfielder Bill Edell brought the score closer with three goals in the fourth quarter. Greg Kline added a goal to finish the scoring for the Gorillas, who will have a week tpo prepare for Hofstra. The Dutchmen beat UMass 16-8 in Hempstead early in the season and vaulted as high as sixth in the polls before losing their final four games.

Garber was surprised by some of the tournament committee's decisions — most notably the exclusion of Brown (10-3) and the inclusion of Maryland (6-5). But he was pleased that UMass will have the opportunity to redeem themselves against Syracuse and Hofstra — two of the four teams

Minutewomen end regular season on high note

By SEAN P. HAYDEN
Collegian Staff

It was the "feel good weekend of the year" for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen ended the nation's longest winning streak at 35 games when they defeated Canisius University 9-0.

In the process, senior third baseman Laurie Dondarski broke the all-time assist record for UMass softball when she recorded her 355th career assist.

"It means a lot because I take pride in my defense, Dondarski said. "Everyone knows I'm not playing because I'm the best hitter in the world so it felt good."

To top it all off, Sunday was Senior Day for the Minutewomen as the seven seniors on the UMass squad were honored after the game against Adelphi University.

The Minutewomen won both games against Adelphi by identical 1-0 scores because the Panthers were unable to field a squad and were forced to forfeit, but made the trip only to participate in an exhibition game for Senior Day.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen and sophomore starter Kelly Daut lost a heartbreaker in the first game, 6-5, in eight innings, before coming back and beating Canisius 9-0 in the nightcap behind the strong outing of senior hurler Darlene Claffey.

"It was nice beating them and the streak in my last game," Claffey said. "I thought we could've beat them in the first game, but there were too many bad breaks."

Sunday was both a high point and a lull for the Minutewomen as the only real action came when UMass held the ceremony honoring the seven seniors who will depart after the Minutewomen participate in the Atlantic 10 tournament this weekend.

The honored seniors were Claffey, Dondarski, left fielder Stacey Nichols, catcher Sherri Kuchinskas, outfielder Ainslee Press, infielder Lisa Melz, and infielder Tabitha Williams.

"I better have done a hell of a job recruiting to replace them," head coach Elaine Sortino said. "We're losing alot and they've had outstanding years here."

"It's weird," Dondarski said. "I can't believe it's been four years, they've gone by so fast."

"I thought the ceremony was good," Nichols said. "I wish we would've had a real game because we were all looking forward to today because we didn't know yesterday was our last game."

The Minutewomen (30-20 overall, 9-1 in the A-10) travel to Allentown, Pa. this weekend to defend their A-10 regular season and tournament championships.

Baseball drops two to Temple, out of playoffs

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

From the beginning of September until the end of May, and in many cold mornings in between, the University of Massachusetts baseball team has worked towards one main goal: make the Atlantic 10 Tournament in Boyertown, Pa., win, and advance to the NCAA Regionals.

Sunday, the goal of the Minutemen (17-21) fell by the wayside, as the team dropped the second of three games to Temple University 10-6.

With the loss, UMass will miss out on next weekend's A-10 Tournament for the first time since 1989. The same weaknesses which had plagued the team all year were in attendance Sunday: poor pitching and fielding.

Although the team came back from a 5-1 deficit with a four-run sixth inning, Temple scored five runs in the last three innings as the Minutemen committed two errors, two wild pitches and a passed ball.

"It's just frustrating, you work all season, you work all fall and all off-season just for one thing, and that's to make it down to Boyertown," said starter Peter Ferrari. "Just to come one game short you think back, think back over the season, where's that one game that you guys could have had.

"Early in the season you don't think they're important but they are. It's really frustrating to put all that work in it . . . and have it not pay off."

"It's pretty frustrating because you look forward to going to the postseason and hopefully get to a regional, win the A-10s, but it's kind of different," said first baseman Bill Knight.

"It's a difficult thing thinking the last game is against Harvard on Wednesday and you aren't trying to get geared up for the postseason," Knight said.

Ferrari was knocked out of the game in the fourth by a two-out, three-run Temple rally. Gaeton Lucibello, Tom Whalen and John Bujnowski drove in the runs with three hits in a row. John Alves came in as the first of five relievers for UMass.

UMass batters saved Ferrari from a loss by knotting the score at five in the sixth. Steve Corradi led off with a double and scored on Justin Howard's ground out. With two out, Knight singled, Greg LaRocca doubled, and Jeff January hit a ground ball that scored the third UMass run. January was safe on the second baseman's error.

Joe Mattivello walked, and pinch hitter Josh Tobin lofted a fly ball in back of second which the right fielder Lou Spadaccini dropped, scoring LaRocca and January to make the game 5-5.

Greg Dowd, who worked out of a jam in the top of the sixth by striking out two with the bases loaded, took the loss by allowing two runs in the top of the seventh.

Temple scored two in the seventh, two in the eighth and one in the ninth. UMass scored one run in the ninth for the 10-6 final.

After dropping the opening game 9-6 on Saturday, the Minutemen kept their playoff hopes alive by winning 11-4 in the second game behind Jeff Toothaker's seven innings of 10-hit ball.

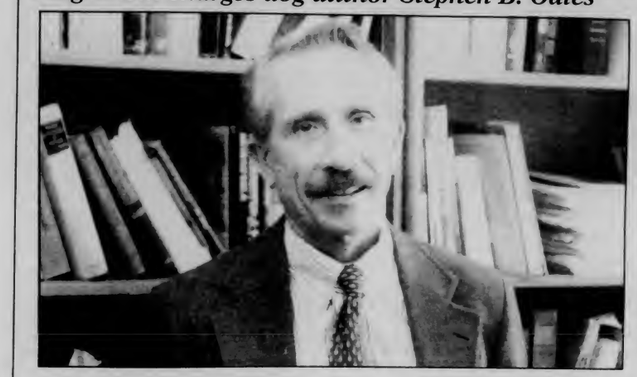
Prof. weathers word war

Plagiarism charges dog author Stephen B. Oates



ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

History professor Stephen B. Oates sits in his UMass office. Oates has made headline after headline in recent years, getting national attention he'd rather not have as charges of plagiarism plague his career.

By DARIENNE HOSLEY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts history professor Stephen B. Oates and his 1977 biography of Abraham Lincoln have received national attention over the past two and a half years, but charges of plagiarism have given him headlines he would rather do without.

In December 1990, Robert Bray, a professor at Illinois-Wesleyan University accused Oates of lifting material from Benjamin Thomas' 1952 biography, Abraham Lincoln, and using it in his own With Malice Toward None: The Life of Abraham Lincoln, without giving Thomas credit.

In the months since, Oates, a 1981 recipient of the University's Distinguished Teacher Award who has published 13 books, has lived a cycle of charges, judgment and then new accusations.

"I've been cleared three different times by three different panels of these same allegations," Oates said. "And yet it goes on."

Most recently, two scientists at the National Institutes of Health renewed the controversy last March. They announced they had run a number of Oates' works through their computerized "plagiarism machine" and found over 175 examples of similar phrasing in Oates' Lincoln biography and another 340 in his biographies of Martin Luther King Jr. and author William Faulkner.

"They're not accusing me of lifting significant passages out of one book; they're just talking about overlapping phrases and little segments and snippets of factual information," Oates said.

"These two scientists, without any training whatsoever, or any experience in the field of history and biography, have concocted their own definition of plagiarism, which is so hopelessly restrictive that nothing could be written were that the standard."

An associate professor at Connecticut College, Michael Burlingame, brought the Oates case to the NIH scientists. Burlingame said he goes by the definition of plagiarism in Thomas Mallon's book Stolen Words: Forays into the Origins and Ravages of Plagiarism, which includes "theft of a vivid phrase."

Burlingame, who said he plans to publish a book on Lincoln next year, was first drawn to the case because of his interest in Lincoln but began looking into the charges against Oates' other biographies.

Burlingame points to a passage in Oates' biography of Martin Luther King Jr. as an example. Oates wrote, "Sometimes there was only the hawk of a throat, the sound of spit against the receiver." He then notes the phrasing in an article on King from Time magazine: "Sometimes there was only the hawk of a throat and the splash of spittle against the ear piece."

"If that's not theft of a vivid phrase, I don't know what is," Burlingame said.

Bosnian village virtually empty after Serb siege

By TERRY LEONARD
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — U.N. officials sought Monday to cope with what one called a "humanitarian catastrophe" in Zepa and said 200 wounded needed to be evacuated from the rugged mountain area by helicopter.

On a separate front in Bosnia's civil war, the U.N. commander in former Yugoslavia demanded to know the whereabouts of hundreds of apparently Muslim civilians expelled from Mostar by their one time Croat allies.

U.N. military observers who reached Zepa for the first time Sunday, said 30 of 200 wounded people needed urgent treatment , according to a statement from the Zagreb, Croatia, headquarters of the U.N. peacekeeping force.

About 40,000 people lived in Zepa and surrounding villages, including 6,000 in the town itself, before fleeing last week's Serb siege. The seven U.N. military observers reported that the town was nearly deserted and 10 bodies in a mosque were among the corpses lying about U.N. officials said.

"If the situation report in Zepa is correct, then it is a humanitarian catastrophe of tremendous magnitude, if there are 50 people wandering around a city that was at least 6,000 before the shelling," said John McMillan, a U.N. aid official in Sarajevo.

Zepa, 45 miles northeast of Sarajevo, is at the bottom of a rugged mountain valley.

The U.N. observers said most residents had fled to the hills and were living in huts and makeshifts tents or in the open. Most had been surviving on food from the U.S.-led airdrops, but they urgently needed basic foodstuffs, blankets, tents, clothing and medicine, the U.N. statement said.

"There have been signs of heavy shelling the past few days, witnessed by bombed out and burned houses everywhere," said Cmdr. Barry Frewer, the peacekeeper spokesman in Sarajevo. "they have found several bodies, in particular 10 bodies in a mosque in the town."

Investigations of the outlying villages had not been completed, he said.

Zepa was one of six "safe areas" declared by the United Nations on Thursday after Bosnian Serbs once again rejected an international plan to halt an ethnic war that has left more than 134,000 people dead or missing in the past 13 months.

About 100 U.N. peacekeepers arrived in Zepa Monday afternoon to demilitarize the town under a cease fire signed over the weekend by the Bosnia's Muslim-led government and Serbs. The demilitarization accord also covers Srebrenica and other embattled Muslim enclave in the east.

Zepa was quiet Monday, Frewer said, through ob-

First birthday comes around for the Black Student Union

By TRACY MONAHAN
Collegian Staff

The Black Student Union celebrated its first anniversary with a community awards brunch at the Top of the Campus restaurant on Saturday morning.

The brunch opened with a presentation to all the members of the BSU Gospel Choir. The choir then performed the Black National Anthem to a silent, standing crowd.

Fabiola Narcisse, president of the BSU, welcomed the audience. She said the banquet was coordinated to recognize the sacrifices made by groups and individuals that go unnoticed by the community.

Mary Custard, tutorial director for the Collegiate Committee for Education of Black and other Minority Students, read the poem "If We Must Die." She said she was proud of the community.

"No matter what the odds we must continue to fight the good fight. We must be brave but we must be counted," Custard said. "It's been a difficult year, but despite the odds you stood up, you voiced our concerns."

The Community Service Awards, presented by UMass student Kevin Irvine, were given to groups which included the Black Mass Communications Project, the Black Affairs Page in the Collegian, Nommo News and the Malcolm X Cultural Center for their work in the community.

Delphine Quarles, an organizational advisor in the Student Activities Office, handed out the Outstanding Community Service Awards, presented to individuals for their personal contributions.

"This is the first time I've seen so much color in this room and it's wonderful," Quarles said.

The Community Outreach Awards were presented by UMass student Penny

Abortion foes stymied

High court turns away two appeals

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — A divided Supreme Judicial Court rejected appeals Monday by two abortion foes, including the head of the state's chapter of Operation Rescue, imprisoned for violating a court order against blockading clinics.

William Cotter, arrested at a Brookline clinic in connection with anti-abortion demonstrations on Aug. 10 and Aug. 23, 1991, rejected a probation offer and was sentenced to two and a half years in prison for violating a Middlesex Superior Court injunction against blocking clinics.

Judge Robert H. Bohn Jr. said he would make Cotter serve one year in prison and suspend the rest of the sentence for three years, if Cotter would not take part in any abortion clinic blockades during that time.

Cotter rejected that offer and Bohn handed down the longer prison term.

Cotter appealed saying Bohn was punishing him for future behavior.

In rejecting Cotter's appeal on a 4-3 vote, the SJC ruled that since the preliminary injunction already banned clinic blockades. Bohn was asking Cotter only to obey the law as a condition of the suspended sentence.

"It seems to have been a good deal for the defendant, who would be agreeing only to do what the law required of him anyway," Justice Herbert Wilkins wrote in the decision. "The defendant, however, declined to enter into the agreement, as was his right. The offer was not accepted and the judge was free to impose a different sentence which he did."

Recent incidents recorded by the University's Department of Public Safety.

Larceny

• An individual reported Wednesday morning the theft of his bicycle, valued at $750, from the bike rack in Washington Lot.

• An individual reported Wednesday morning the theft of his bicycle, valued at $500, from the bike rack on Washington Road.

• An individual in Van Meter Residence Hall reported Wednesday afternoon that her bicycle, valued at $350, was stolen.

• An individual from Gorman Residence Hall reported Wednesday afternoon that his bicycle, valued at $440, was stolen from the bicycle rack.

• On Thursday night, an individual in Patterson Residence Hall reported six dress shirts, valued at $160, were stolen from the laundry room.

• An individual reported on Friday morning that a shoulder bag and his telephone were stolen from his room. The goods were valued at $300.

Accident-Property Damage

• A vehicle travelling south on Stockbridge Road was struck by a vehicle pulling into traffic Sunday evening. The damage was estimated at $4,000.

The three who disagreed Justices Joseph Nolan. Neil Lynch and Francis O'Connor said Bohn "retaliated" against Cotter, sending him to prison because he would not agree to avoid future blockades.

"Our law does not permit a judge to punish a defendant for not making a promise in open court. . . . To obtain a suspended sentence, Cotter was required to avow that his attempts to 'rescue' unborn children were 'unlawful activities and that he will not participate in them further regardless of the circumstances" Lynch wrote.

Voting with Wilkins were Chief Justice Paul Liacos and Justices Ruth Abrams and John Greaney.

By the same vote, the court also rejected an appeal by Sean Brogan, who blockaded the clinic in 1990 a Boston clinic in 1991, in violation of the Middlesex injunction.

Brogari had argued that rather than be tried in Middlesex County he should have been tried in Suffolk, Norfolk and Bristol counties, where he demonstrated at clinics.

servers reported sporadic shelling in the surrounding mountains.

But in Mostar 80 miles to the southwest, fighting between Croats and the mostly Muslim Bosnian army supposed allies against the Serbs continued Monday morning before ebbing, the United Nations said.

Similar to the Serb dream of a Greater Serbia, many Bosnian Croats envision a Greater Croatia. Its eastern border would be the Neretva River, which runs through Mostar.

A cease fire was agreed to Monday between Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic and Mate Boban, leader of Bosnia's Croats, said Dalgreed Bagga, a peacekeeping official in Zagreb. It was to take effect at 6 p.m. if soldiers could be promptly notified, he said.

Lt. Gen. Lars-Eric Wahlgren, commander of all U.N. forces in ex-Yugoslavia, called for an investigation into the fate of "hundreds of civilians" seen leaving Mostar under armed Croat escort Sunday.

Observers "saw civilians on the buses making hand gestures through the windows indicating they were being held captive," it added.

U.N. officials said Croat forces had so far prevented them from entering Mostar and Wahlgrem asked the International Red Cross to investigate.

"The safety of civilians, including refugees, caught up in this fighting must be guaranteed," Wahlgren said.

The United Nations has said Croat forces attacked first at dawn Sunday. The fighting was so heavy that the Spanish U.N. peacekeepers based in Mostar were forced to move to surrounding hills.

Bosnian Croats forced Muslim residents of Mostar to identify themselves on Sunday by hanging white blankets from their windows, U.N. officials said.

Bagga said the Spanish observers reported that women and children were taken out in one convoy and "male prisoners" were taken to a factory in Mostar.

The war in Bosnia began when Bosnian Serbs-dominated Yugoslavia.

Camille Cosby donates $50,000

The National Coalition for Equality in Learning, based at the University of Massachusetts, received a boost in its efforts to help improve the quality of the nation's schools, when Camille Cosby recently donated $50,000 to aid coalition's efforts.

Cosby, who received a doctorate in education from the University, is a member of the coalition's advisory board.

The donation will help establish tutoring centers in Boulder, Colo., Montgomery, Ala., Spring, Texas and San Fransisco, Cal., to help serve students, who are falling behind in reading, writing and math.

The centers seek to help teach parents how to provide a home environment that supports their children's education. The coalition will also use Cosby's donation to set up health care centers and provide scholarships to high school students, who could not otherwise afford college.

The 'cool' dictionary

Two UMass seniors are compiling a dictionary that will contain a lot of words you probably won't find in American Heritage.

Dwayne Boyd of Leominster and Matthew Woodbury of Marshfield, both English majors, are working on creating a supplement to C.U.S.S., or the College Undergraduate Slang Survey. The Survey was a dictionary of slang terminology written by students at Brown University.

The new supplement will include up-to-date terms such as "bogus," "cool," "bad" and "tweaked."

Admitting to a "passion for writing," Boyd submits poetry, essays, and short stories to his hometown literary magazine, SLUGFEST, which is published by the Society for Literary Umbrage and Gratification.

The project was suggested by Audrey Duckert, a linguist, lexicographer and English professor at the University of Massachusetts.

ROTC to hold commissioning

The Reserve Officers Training Corps at the University of Massachusetts will hold its joint Army-Air Force commissioning on Sunday, May 23 at 8 a.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Four Air Force and 10 Army officer candidates will be commissioned as second lieutenants at the ceremony.

The keynote speaker is 1967 University alumnus Col. Theodore A. Monette Jr. Monette is currently the commander of U.S. Army Readiness Group Devens, Fort Devens, Mass., and was the outstanding cadet in his class at the University.

After graduation, Monette was stationed first at Fort Wainwright and served in Vietnam in 1969-1970. He was assistant professor of military science at Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine, where he also earned a master of science degree in education.

Monette graduated from the Naval War College in 1992, after which he assumed his duties at Fort Devens.

UMass open bank

The University of Massachusetts will hold an open house at its new Springfield office on May 11 from 4 to 6 p.m.

The office, located in the Bank of Boston building at 1350 Main Street, opened on April 1 with the support of Western Massachusetts Electric Company and the Greater Springfield Chamber of Commerce in an effort to bring the University's resources closer to the area's business and population center.

"University faculty and staff have worked in Springfield for years, with the local schools as well as with economic development leaders, business people and human service providers," said Chancellor Richard O'Brien. "For more than 10 years, the Small Business Development Center has counseled businesses in the region from its office on State Street, for instance."

Among the officials scheduled to attend the open house are O'Brien, Springfield Mayor Robert Markel, Gordon Oakes, chair of the UMass Board of Trustees and Bob Abair, vice president of WMECO.

Concert accident victim critical

Spring Concert but a memory; staff dismantles stage

The Rhode Island man, who fell from a Morrill Science Center Building during Sunday's Spring Concert, was listed in critical condition yesterday by Bay State Medical Center officials in Springfield.

Christopher O'Neill, 20, was diagnosed with internal bleeding in his skull by Bay State personnel when he was admitted Sunday evening, said a hospital spokesperson, who refused to elaborate.

See Spring Concert photo essay, pages 9,10 and 11

Witnesses say O'Neill climbed over a railing between sections of the building, said University spokesperson Karin Sherbin on Sunday. O'Neill attempted to jump to the sidewalk below, but lost his balance and fell to the ground, Sherbin said.

After being treated at the scene by EMTs, O'Neill was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton and then transferred to Springfield.

Sherbin reported no other major problems or arrests.

Meanwhile, all that should be left today of this year's annual Spring Concert should be memories, after student Union Program Council workers were expected to complete the dismantling of the stage last night.

UPC Stage Manager Alison Brennan said she expected her crew of 23 stage hands to finish eliminating all trace of the stage from the lawn in front of the Campus Pond by 7 p.m. last night.

"It takes two and a half days to put it up," Brennan said. "But it only takes one day to come down."

Brennan said Channel 40 News out of Springfield yesterday interviewed University and UPC officials yesterday about O'Neill's fall. Brennan maintained that no amount of UPC security could have prevented O'Neill's injuries.

"The amount of security we had here was staggering," Brennan said. "We can't cover everyone."

Shannon Watson, UPC advertising director, said about four or five students spent several nights sleeping on the stage, protecting the equipment from vandals.

The stage and much of the stage equipment was borrowed from Mountain Productions, she said.

Trees prepared for construction

By ANDREW BRYCE
Collegian Staff

Preparing for construction work that will take place this summer in the area surrounding the Durfee Conservatory Center, 25 students of the Stockbridge Arboriculture School volunteered time yesterday to help prepare trees for the ordeal.

The students, who are in the utilities in municipal arboriculture class, cleaned up the large area by pruning the trees and injecting them with a type of fertilizer called Mauget Tree Injection.

Some of the students climbed the tree to remove the deadwood, while others injected the trees with the microinjection.

According to Dennis Ryan, professor of the class and organizer of the volunteer work done yesterday, it is important for the trees to be cleaned due to construction that will take place this summer.

"We're fertilizing (the trees) and getting the dangerous deadwood out of them," Ryan said. "They are light branches, nothing that's heavy duty."

Kyle Wells, a senior at the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, stresses the importance of preparing the trees for the summer.

"We're basically pruning the trees — thinning them out, cleaning them," said Wells. "Usually, when there is construction, it puts a negative effect on the trees — the heavy machinery going around the root system and root zone."

"What we want to do is try and pick the vigor up a little bit so it can handle the construction."

This was volunteer work that the students did through their utilities class. Ryan does this with many of his classes so that the students in the major can receive the needed experience in their field.

"Whenever we can fit (the volunteer work) into the curriculum, we do," Ryan said. "We heard the construction was going on this summer, so we said we'd do it. We were going to do the injection anyway."

Wells is pleased about what his class accomplished.

"I feel good about it not only because it is voluntary, but also that since we are at school more than at home, it's as if we are keeping our home clean. Wells said."

"We take a lot of pride in participating in a project like this. This also allows us to get more experience with practical hands-on training," Wells said.

Oates

Oates says that such similarities can be explained by the fact that historians rely on the same sources, and that as his book contains some similarities to Thomas' book, passages from Thomas echo passages from earlier books.

Burlingame agrees that some similarities are inevitable, but that Oates has gone beyond reasonable expectations.

"You'll see that the only two that are nearly that close are Oates and Thomas. Instead of addressing the issue directly, [Oates] has gone around attacking the accusers, and that's irrelevant," Burlingame said.

Robert E. Jones, chairman of the UMass history department, said he stands fully behind Oates, and said he believes there is "no substance" to the accusations against him.

"This is much ado about nothing," Jones said. "Plagiarism is not doing the work yourself, presenting someone else's work as your own. Rather he's doing what lots of people do: taking material from lots of different sources and synthesizing them."

"It's sometimes said if you steal from one author it's plagiarism; if you steal from 10 it's research," Jones said.

The charges against Oates were dismissed in May 1991 by a group of 23 Lincoln scholars and in November 1991 by the University of Massachusetts. In a public statement with the UMass report, Chancellor Richard O'Brien wrote, "I am delighted to state that the due process which has now been followed has confirmed the general opinion that Professor Oates, one of our most distinguished faculty and a person of great national distinction, enjoys a high reputation which his works have earned him."

The American Historical Association, of which Oates is not a member, looked into the charges and released their decision in May 1992. The report did not use the word plagiarism, but said Oates "failed to give Mr. Thomas sufficient attribution for the material he used."

Patrick Mitchell, currently enrolled in Oates' American Biography class, is impressed with how Oates has handled the accusations.

"Once a plagiarism charge has been levelled against you, there's very little you can do to defend yourself," he said. "Most professors, because of their bookish nature, would curl into a little ball and hide in their academic cave, but he handled it head on. Sure, he must have been embarrassed, but he walked into class and said, 'We're discussing plagiarism today.'"

Mitchell, a history major who plans to graduate next fall, thinks the charge of plagiarism is groundless.

"I'm reading [Oates' With Malice Toward None] right now and damn, this is the finest biography of Lincoln I've ever read," Mitchell said. "When it's a matter of three of four words — if that's the definition of plagiarism, that's very dangerous."

Don't wait 'till senior year

Yesterday, somebody told me that classes end on Wednesday. Funny, I thought they ended right after Spring Break — oops! Oh well! Regardless, another year at UMass has come and gone, and if all goes according to plan, I'll be awarded the title of "UMass Junior." Pretty impressive. For all the money my parents spend here though, I should have the pick of any title I choose. Hmm, what about chancellor...

Stephanie
EISENBERG

Actually, I'm over-qualified for that job, because according to Coach Cal and my SAT scores, I'm quite brilliant. While I thank him for the compliment, I wish him much luck in conveying that to my parents. So I guess I'll embrace my new status with open arms.

Being a junior at UMass is going to be kind of scary. I just got used to my underclassman niche, only to have life pull that rug out right underneath my feet. So now, I'm on shaky footing, and I'm not quite sure where I stand, or what I'm doing.

Regardless, I'm enjoying the fact that I'm not a graduating senior. As a freshman, I really didn't comprehend the full extent of what graduating meant, but now, as I prepare to see so many friends leave, I realize that graduation is the closing of one door and the opening of another.

As we see the class of '93 leave, we can do nothing but learn from them. As underclassmen, we have the power to view their mistakes and profit from them. Almost every graduating senior has some regrets. Listen to them, so in a few years from now, it's not you quoting the same lines.

Despite its flaws, UMass is a wondrous place where almost anything can happen. In high school and in the "real world," we learn only what others choose for us to learn. Here, we choose what we want to know, and then it is slowly fed to us, in a variety of different ways. Every opportunity under the sun is available to us; as students here we can experiment with everything from theater to hang gliding.

There will never be another time in our lives when we can be so carefree. The stresses we have now are nothing compared to the future. So take the time to enjoy UMass to its fullest. Here we can be anything we want and we can do anything we want. Now is truly the time to seize the day.

As underclassmen at this University, we are the future. What we make of ourselves now shapes us for tomorrow. We have the power to make a better tomorrow. So listen to the class of ninety three, hear their regrets and their triumphs, and then learn from them. We are the future!

To all my friends that are graduating, I wish you all the best of luck. You will truly make this world a better place to live in. I will miss you. And to everyone, carpe diem!

Columnist goes undercover

I wasn't going to write a column this week since I'm currently hard at work on my first novel, The Eggplant Cometh, a witty satire on the contemporary wholesale carpet trade. However, I was so struck with a discovery I made last week that I decided to temporarily shelve my masterpiece in order to issue this grave warning.

There are dark forces at work on this campus. Men and women who hold prominent positions are conspiring to overthrow the natural conservatism of this country.

Jesse
ARMSTRONG

I made this shocking discovery while strolling around leafy Northampton on Tuesday evening. Imagine my surprise when I heard the dulcet tones of illustrious Collegian editor David Rivera ringing out from a porch in the shady lanes behind Smith College.

As I approached I was able to make out more figures at what was clearly a gathering of the UMass cultural elite. Sitting around a dinner table with Rivera were the twin Goddesses of the Ed-Op page, Darienne Hosley and E.C. Thomas and a group of leading columnists including that last bastion of conservatism, Michael Morrissey.

It was with trepidation that I joined this secretive group, but I consoled myself that no great mischief could be perpetrated with Mr. Morrissey present. How wrong I was.

Initially, of course, the group tried to keep up a facade of normality. "Would you like a knife and fork for that steak Mike?" our kind hostess asked.

"No, I'm fine with my hands," replied the sober columnist.

"Or maybe I could cook it a little for you?"

"No, no, raw is good..."

But they couldn't keep up their pretence for long; I was midway through a story when the group revealed all. I was telling of how I was visiting Emily Dickinson's house recently when it occurred to me that it really wasn't all that remarkable that the reclusive poet never went out since all the bars in Amherst are so crowded and unpleasant. "Of course I suppose it is surprising that she never went for a slice at Antonio's, but then maybe they used to deliver..." I was about to continue when E.C. Thomas broke in.

"Look, Jesse, I think you ought to know, this isn't just a regular dinner party, we are here to plot the downfall of the state, by violent means if necessary."

Naturally I was shocked, but not as shocked as when, with a sigh, Mike Morrissey swapped his steak for a plate of vegetable lasagna, and took a sip from a previously concealed chilled bottle of Chardonnay.

"I don't generally drink," the columnist leaned over and confided, "but I've just learned that my application for the position of director of women's studies at Smith has been rejected, and I'm feeling rather despondent."

As the conversation continued it became obvious that the reticent columnist Nathan Crick was the self-styled leader of this band of desperados. "A kind of wry Che Guavara, a less po-faced Trotsky," he described himself in a moment of openness.

The terrible climax of the evening came when the group solemnly burnt that ultimate symbol of liberty, the stars and stripes. And as the last star disappeared up into a could of dense black smoke, I can't be sure, but I think I saw a tear of regret well in the eye of Mike Morrissey.

Naughty by Nature a vulgarity

I was one of thousands at the Spring Concert Sunday for the finale: Naughty by Nature. However, I felt as if I were the only one who wasn't cheering them on.

"How many of you ladies like a long, wet tongue... in your ear... down your neck... between your titties?"

"How many of you ladies have real titties? Well, that's good because I don't want a mouth full of jelly."

"I don't care if you have fake titties... as long as you have a real pussy cat."

"Happy Mother Fkers Day."

"How many out there are mother fing niggers?"

Behind this crudeness were anti-racism and safe sex comments, but their good intentions were outweighed by their lewd remarks. I expressed my discontent to an African American friend of mine who said, "Yeah, they may say that, but they have the utmost respect for women."

When I argued about their unnecessary cursing and vulgarity, he said, "Well, that's just their culture."

Their culture? I was too upset to argue further, but I would still like to know what this means. Who could be proud of that way of life? Do they always talk like that?

It doesn't bother me that these tasteless men were saying those things. They have the right to be sexist. What unnerved me were the men and women cheering for these bigots. I am disappointed, discouraged and disgusted that UMass paid to allow students to encourage these offensive swine.

Johannah Davies
Southwest

Afro-Am professor disheartened with columnist, editors

By experiences and inclination I tend to be supportive of student activism and very sympathetic to the issues of responsibility, freedom and autonomy which surround the student press. I am also extremely jealous of the values and integrity of the mission and educational principles of an institution to which I have, thus far, devoted my professional career.

A column the editors saw fit to publish has brought these issues together in sharp and disheartening focus [Collegian, April 2]. The community was alerted to the danger of selecting as chancellor a Black woman. For which reason, we were warned, this appointment would hasten the inevitable and irreversible decline of the University by way of an erosion of standards, following an influx of marginal Black students certain to be academically incompetent and disposed to criminal violence. Does it really need to be explained to the editors why that column is, on a number of grounds, an embarrassment to the community?

First, it is a professional embarrassment to any newspaper that intends itself to be taken seriously, because it is bad journalism, stupid, biased and demonstrably false. Twenty-five years ago as this campus prepared to receive its first class of 250 Black students, that was the kind of ignorance that may have been whispered in some circles. But it was never dignified by publication in this newspaper. Since then the University has admitted 25 classes with Blacks in them, and been governed by a Black chancellor and provost. There has been no crime wave, and the only erosion of standards that has been visible, seems to be with the competence and judgment of our student journalists.

Second, it is bad political judgment and very poor taste indeed. It is a political embarrassment to a community, desperately in search of internal civility, public good will and respect because it insults every student, administrator, faculty member, employee, parent, taxpayer and citizen in this Commonwealth, who is not White. Which principles — editorial, intellectual or political — are served by publishing this?

Third, and perhaps worst: it is a rebuke to the teaching vocation, an embarrassment to the notion of human enlightenment, of intellectual and moral progress through education.

I have met the writer, or at least his spiritual and intellectual ancestors. But I hardly expected to meet their descendants again and in such a community, and certainly not in the editorial pages of this newspapers. Thirty years ago they came to our demonstrations against racial segregation in the nation's capitol. Then they swaggered in the uniforms of Nazi storm troopers with swastikas on their sleeves. The shortest of their number always slouched around in a gorilla suit with a sign around his neck which read "Martin Luther Coon." Among them this was considered high wit. You can see why I detect a kinship with your columnist. I met them again in Mississippi. There they wore bed sheets, burned crosses, churches and synagogues, and circulated their 11 "proofs" that "the nigger is a beast." We knew that if enough of them met few enough of us in the dark they would kill us. Which indeed happened.

But, we told ourselves, these are society's detritus. Among people more economically and socially secure, and fortunate enough to be civilized by education, we will not find these disabilities. That is why I am surprised to meet their descendants on this campus. That kind of behavior, and the attitudes which produce it, cannot possibly survive in the community of educated people, or so we thought.

If that is so, then we need to ask: to which of those social deprivations is Mr. Morrissey the victim? How is his ignorance and mean spirit to be explained? And what is the excuse for the bad judgment of the Collegian editors? Are these indeed the ethical and professional standards taught by their mentors in the University's journalism department? Are these students the best, or even representative products of a UMass education?

Were I persuaded that this were true, it would be past time to reconsider my involvement here and in the entire educational enterprise. But happily, it is more usual to meet students who seem intelligent and decent, young people fully worthy of respect and confidence. So one takes heart and continues.

Cameron to people who work to strengthen and support their organizations through community outreach.

"These people are the heart and backbone of their organizations," Cameron said. "Without them the organization wouldn't mean the same as it does now."

Sidonio Ferreria, an academic advisor at CCEBMS, presented the ACE Awards to one member of an organization who remains committed to the original mission of the group.

The Leadership Awards were presented by David Nuñez, president of the Undergraduate Student Senate, to leaders of organizations who have secured an ongoing position in the future for their groups.

"Being a leader means that when things go wrong, people are on your case and when things go right people are on your case," Nuñez said.

Associate Dean for Special Programs Ricardo Townes repeated Custard's opening remarks. He presented the Academic Awards.

The Academic Achievement awards went to students who received a 3.0 G.P.A. or better. Academic Excellence awards were presented to students with 3.5 G.P.A. or better. The Esteemed Scholars awards went to Jelia Domingo and Nicole Sullivan, who both received a 4.0 G.P.A. for the fall semester.

The BSU Gospel Choir performed "Love Said Not So," "Can't Nobody Do Me Like Jesus" and "His Eyes on the Sparrow."

Custard presented the Ida B. Wells Award to the student who best exemplifies the qualities of Wells' activist spirit.

"This person should be articulate in both word and deed," Custard said.

The recipient of this award was Malkes Gomes, a peer advisor for CCEBMS, president of the Third World Caucus and a performer in the New World theater in addition to many other activities.

Narcisse made remarks about the first year of the BSU.

"There have been a lot of changes. We had a turbulent semester, but this spring we're back on track," Narcisse said.

Student trustee-elect Al Lizana made the final remarks. He said he hopes to "funnel leadership up into a higher level of the administration."

"Let's not have it be the last time we do this," Lizana said.

Virginia, Loyola and UMass.

It's more difficult to make a case for ninth-seeded Maryland. The Terps are a lowly 6-5, but they, too, had a tough schedule, beat Navy, and upset fifth-seeded Virginia in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament.

Furthermore, if the Terrapins can beat Army at West Point and upset number one North Carolina, who crunched them twice this season, they would return to their home stadium in College Park, Md. for the Final Four.

But Mike Preston, the lacrosse reporter at the Baltimore Sun — which gives college lacrosse in-depth coverage rivaled only by the Syracuse Post-Standard and Herald-Tribune — thinks Maryland is deserving of a bid.

"Maryland played Virginia twice and North Carolina twice," Preston said. "They beat Navy in overtime and beat Towson. And, Towson's a tough team. They're better than their record [6-5]. But neither Army or Maryland will beat UNC."

Virginia's former head coach Dom Starsia felt the Bruins were victimized by a number of factors, most notably their loss to UMass and what he thought was a "down year" in the Ivy League.

"Wins over Yale, Cornell and Penn usually carry more weight," Starsia said of Brown's schedule. "I thought the Brown-UMass game was a playoff game. . . one gets in, and the other's in deep trouble."

"I talked to three coaches and all of them had Brown in," Preston said. "But UMass' upset of Brown knocked them out."

Starsia was not surprised by Hofstra's number six seeding, despite the Dutchmen's late-season skid and early-season loss to 12th-seeded Notre Dame.

"I had them up there," Starsia said of Hofstra. "They beat four tournament teams. There's not a lot of teams who can claim four tournament wins. Those were big, strong wins."

Preston disagreed.

"I didn't think they were for real. They played a lot of big games at home and they faded down the stretch," he said of the Flying Dutchmen. "They don't have a lot of depth."

Virginia received what appears to be an easy draw in the tournament. They begin at home against 12th-seeded Notre Dame. If the Cavaliers win, they advance to face Johns Hopkins, the fourth seed. Virginia lost to Hopkins earlier this year, 13-11.

"Loyola got the biggest break," Preston said, explaining the 10th-seeded Greyhounds wanted no part of Syracuse or North Carolina.

"Princeton is the most beatable of the top four teams," Preston said.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AWARD RECIPIENTS

The Chancellor's Commission in Civility in Human Relations is pleased to announce recent funding of five additional proposals in response to its Request for Proposals program this spring. A joint Review Committee of the Commission and the Chancellor's Multicultural Advisory Board selected these five from a total of seven proposals which were resubmitted to better conform to funding requirements. In all, eleven proposals received funding this spring from the 38 originally submitted to the Commission. The five proposals most recently funded include:

"Religion and Homosexuality Series," an educational series aimed at exploring issues of homosexuality from personal, political, theological and historical perspectives. This proposal was jointly submitted by the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns and Hillel.

"1993 International Fair," an event aimed at promoting understanding and friendly relations between International and American students on the campus and within the larger Five Campus community. This proposal was submitted by the International Students Association.

"About Face Forward," a photographic exhibition of Jewish Holocaust survivors incorporating which incorporated excerpts of survivor interviews which was part of Holocaust Memorial Week events. The proposal was submitted by Seth Kaye, an undergradnate student, and the Holocaust Memorial Week Committee.

"Bosnia Under Siege," a series of twelve lectures open to the Five-College community examining the present conflict in the Balkans from a number of perspectives. This proposal was submitted by the Muslim Students Association and was co-sponsored by a large number of campus, Five College and community organizations.

"Women of Color Network", a program aimed at bringing together women of color new to the campus to create an ongoing network for identifying mentors and role models, familiarizing participants with campus resources and encouraging collaboration among diverse communities. This proposal was submitted by the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students, the Bilingual Collegiate Program, Everywoman's Center, the Minority Graduate Student Recruitment Office, Minority Recruitment/Admissions, and United Asia Learning Resource Center.

The Chancellor's Commission on Civility in Human Relations wishes to thank all those who made submissions to its Request for Proposals initiative, and hopes to continue with a similar program in the 1993-94 academic year.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The emphasis now is on spicing up a longtime love relationship. Sharing new activities will add to your mutual enchantment. If financial advice is needed, consult qualified people.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You know how to get ahead in business without letting anyone know what you are up to. Continue to court influential people. Your secret efforts to help a friend pay off.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A private meeting could lead to a windfall. You are in an excellent position to negotiate a major purchase. A secret you learn may be a gold mine. Keep everything legal.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A pressing personal or family matter may arise. Do your duty. Remain upbeat this afternoon to avoid a clash with higher-ups. The wrong companions could jeopardize your reputation. Be discreet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Good manners are an important asset now. Avoid trading insults with your competitors. If you can figure out a way to distance yourself from the daily hubbub, you will accomplish more.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A financial dream shows signs of coming true. You can speed up the process by mixing business with pleasure. Arguing with a friend is counterproductive. Keep your own counsel.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Guard against appearing impractical or bossy - your ideas are imaginative, but not as realistic as you think. A friend offers down-to-earth advice. Follow it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Influential people see you in a new light when you discuss your ambitions. A loan may be authorized. Vigorous exercise and a loving friend help you feel better.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A favorable day for expressing your hopes to an authority figure. Your slow but steady advancement is recognized and applauded. Do not enter into secret romantic liaisons.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An assertive approach will lead to quicker career progress. You are able to obtain an important endorsement or favorable price. Renew your focus on diet and exercise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): With extra diplomacy and tact, a roadblock can be removed. An authority figure will help you achieve a goal. You will make even quicker headway with a co-worker's cooperation. Bury the hatchet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Initiate friendly talks with hard to win over people. A former disappearance they see how gracious you can be. Accentuate good will and laughter toward an arguments.

steeplechase finishing second with a time of 9:34.06 seconds.

Other top performers included Kevin Greenhalgh (third in 5000), and Jim Avery (fifth in 800).

This weekend's New England Championships will likely be the last meet for several UMass seniors.

While Joe Kourafas and Pat Reed, have gotten the most attention. Perhaps the most irreplaceable will be Jim Avery.

"From the beginning of fall to the last day of spring, he's meant the most to the team in terms of leadership and positive influence," O'Brien said.

With the strength and depth of the underclassmen, the future looks promising, but Avery will be hard to replace.

BELOW IS A PROGRESS REPORT OF MULTICULTURAL ACTIVITIES. Reports, issued from the Chancellor's office, will be written each month. The intent of the reports, and the essays, by different faculty or staff members, is not only to follow agreements reached between the administration and ALANA students, but also to list the efforts of the community at large in working towards a truly multicultural campus.

MULTICULTURAL AND INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION

by Barbara Burn, Associate Provost for International Programs

In this contribution to the ongoing discussion of multiculturalism in The Campus Chronicle and Collegian, I urge that international education be a major concern at the University of Massachusetts and in the nation as we address the issues of multiculturalism and multicultural learning. The imperatives of international education parallel and underscore the need for American schools and colleges to make multicultural education an important priority.

Exactly what is meant by multicultural and international education is often not clear. To me a central figure of multicultural education in learning about and valuing the differences we find in various ethnic and other groups in American society. A central figure of international education is learning about and valuing the differences we find in the peoples and cultures of countries abroad. In both cases it may involve learning what makes people "tick" in a different culture/country. It may well involve learning their language, for example, Spanish, to understand and bridge cultural, linguistic, and other barriers to interacting with Spanish-speaking persons, whether Puerto Rican or Mexican-American or Mexican, Ecuadorian or Spanish.

Multicultural and international education thus have some commonalities and can compliment and contribute to each other. At the same time, one should not lose sight of the major differences between multicultural and international education. They have quite different definitions of other cultures. While international education involves foreign students at American campuses, sending American students abroad to strengthen their international knowledge and skills, and curricular programs in international and related studies, multicultural education tends to focus on domestic minorities and to encourage a better understanding and betterment of the adverse socio-economic conditions that many experience. Not uncommonly, though this is changing, the persons at colleges and universities in the United States who are concerned with multicultural issues and international education may be quite different sets of people.

In discussing the shared concerns and common strategies of or available to multicultural and international education, I draw on national and international experience as well as developments at UMass.

It may not be fully appreciated how an international perspective can sharpen our insight into what it means that in the United States we are a multicultural society. In a new report, to be released later this month, the United Nations Development Program (UNDP), a UN agency which supports economic growth in the developing world, gives a graphic snapshot of multicultural America. The report ranks countries on the basis of the quality of their education and health provision. The United States ranks number one IF our African-American and Hispanic minorities are excluded. If these groups are treated as separate countries in the listing, they rank #30 and #31 respectively. If the entire American population is included in listing the United States, Japan is in first place and the U.S. around sixth place. That a leading international agency concerned with economic growth and development deliberately presents our multicultural nation in this way should starkly bring home the realities of multiculturalism in terms of our meeting basic human needs in this country.

Although multiculturalism is often, even emphatically, differentiated by the advocates of multicultural education from international education, in some parts of the U.S., especially in Hawaii, multicultural and international concerns are not so different from each other. Hawaii's domestic minorities — in fact the majority of the population —are much more international than are their multicultural counterparts in the continental U.S. The most recent wave of immigrants to Hawaii, to use a Hawaii-like metaphor, constitutes its newest multicultural minority, namely Samoans. Multicultural education in Hawaii blurs and even blends with international education, facilitating the accommodation of new Hawaiians to Hawaii's heavily international multicultural environment.

As in Hawaii, multicultural and international educational concerns and efforts seem likely to merge and blend for the continental United States in the future. The president of the University of Michigan in a recent speech pointed out that the United States is the destination of one-half of the world's emigrants, making this country what he called the foremost "global nation" in the world. Underscoring the increasingly international character of the U.S., President Duderstadt said that the 21st century will be the first post-European century for the U.S. because and absolute majority of the children will have a non-European background. Our multicultural people will also be more and more international, prompting a closer alliance between international and multicultural education.

Already this is happening in public higher education in Massachusetts as our increasingly multicultural population has expanded needs for professionals fluent in languages other than English, especially but not only in Spanish. The University of Massachusetts Medical School in Worcester is a good example. Medical students there are increasingly spending several month segments in their M.D. training working in hospitals and clinics in Latin American countries. The cross-cultural experience they gain is invaluable in helping prepare them for their future career work with some of the cultural minority groups in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. It also aids greatly in improving their fluency in Spanish.

A recent conference organized at Bristol Community College involved another unusual example of accelerated coming together of international and multicultural education. Using a U.S. Department of Education Title VI grant to encourage internationalization of curriculum, Bristol CC under the leadership of Dean Charles Blank developed courses or modules within them which linked international and comparative content with multicultural. Useful and relevant were the heavily Portuguese/Cape Verdean backgrounds of the local population of the Fall River area. A Portuguese language teacher traced the background of and changes in the language as the Portuguese seafarers and whalers of earlier days found landfall in Cape Verde and Massachusetts/Rhode Island, and brought their language with them. An African-American sociology professor in teaching about the Black experience stresses the wide diversity among African-Americans in their cultural, national, and linguistic origins. At the conference he strongly recommended that ethnic studies courses on African-American diversity be offered, a view also put forward by a major speaker from Washington who urged that multicultural studies expand their more typical focus, geared to the white/minority dichotomy, to encompass multicultural studies which educate one multicultural group about others. Multicultural program funding now supports programs for the HBCU's (Historically Black Colleges and Universities) to encourage their students to learn about Asia, and there are other examples.

As part of the coming together of multicultural and international education the globalization of the economy of the U.S., is , of course, enormously important. The economic competitiveness of the United States in the global market place requires us to strengthen our international knowledge and skills. The internationalization of American demographics, together with the blurring of international and multicultural education, could give an important impetus to a strengthening alliance, not only between the international and multicultural but, as urged by Joyce Berkman in a recent Campus Chroncle, also between different multicultural groups.

A major element in this alliance is the increasing participation of multicultural students in international programs and activities. Already this participation is on the rise. The International Programs Office encourages this through special scholarship funds. In the past several years IPO has sent African American, Hispanic, and Asian-American students to study abroad in such places as St. Petersburg Technical University in Russia, in France, Japan, China, Taiwan, and Germany, and in the Dominican Republic. At the national level IPO collaborates with other colleges and universities in support of more minority participation in international education and study abroad, for example, with funding under the new National Security Education Act which provides a $150 million endowment for international education, including study abroad.

At UMass a new linkage between international and multicultural education should develop a connection with our new student/faculty exchange program with the University of Fort Hare in South Africa. To be launched, we hope, in Fall 1993, the exchange will enable UMass and Five College students to pursue degree studies in Fort Hare, a distinguished Black University and the oldest of South Africa's universities for African students. The University of Fort Hare has been designated as the repository of the archives of the African National Congress which should give study there a special appeal to UMass students who are interested in the liberation and anti-apartheid movements in South Africa. In the context of linking multicultural and international education together, the exchange with the University of Fort Hare will achieve success if it sends not only African-American students from UMass to study in South Africa but members of other multicultural groups as well who also share a concern for issues of human equality and freedom.

PROGRESS REPORT REGARDING THE MULTICULTURAL CAMPUS

In keeping with the 11/7/92 ALANA agreements

The first complete police training has taken place. In the future, police training will be an on-going process.

Other initiatives taken

4/6/93 The results of a conference of Deans and Chairs on undergraduate education teaching and multiculturalism held last fall were presented to Provost Gordon. Among the recommendations were to recruit more women and minority faculty, establish teaching and advisory support structures to increase the level of undergraduate success for students from diverse cultural and educational backgrounds, and improve awards for teaching, advising, and research activities that advance the multicultural agenda of the University

4/13/93 It was announced that professors Sutton and Chilton will speak on "Minority Counts and Minority Preferences" at the Census Bureau's Research Conference on Undercounted Ethnic Populations in May.

4/23/93 The second half of the Symposium on Puerto Rican Migration and Education was sponsored by El Consejo de Educacion Superior de Puerto Rico, the Cultural Diversity and Curriculum Reform Project at UMass, and the Mauricio Gaston Institute at UMass/Boston in collaboration with the Latin American Studies Program and AHORA.

4/27/93 Latin American Week was celebrated.

4/28/93 Asian-American political activist, Yuri Kochiyama, gave a lecture entitled, "The Road to Unity: Learning About Ourselves, Learning About Others, Learning About History."

5/4/93 The Chancellor's Task Force on Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Matters held an open forum to request input from the community regarding concerns and to hear testimony on GLB-related issues.

5/5/93 The Chancellor's Awards for Multiculturalism were presented at a reception for this year's winners, Sabuur Abdul-Kareem, a graduate student in the Education Department, was the student recipient, Madeline Peters, Assistant Director of Disability Services, was the staff recipient, and Professor Ketu Katrak, from the English Department, was the faculty recipient.

Detroit Pistons [from Miami]: J.R. Rider; 8. Milwaukee Bucks: Calbert Cheaney; 9. Denver Nuggets: Terry Dehere; 10. Orlando Magic: Rodney Rogers; 11. Detroit Pistons: Luther Wright.

Analysis: Golden State wins in my book if they luck out and have a shot at Bradley. Even though he is unproven, he is still a big man.

The Pistons will gamble on Wright because they need help up front. If Detroit fears old age, Dehere could find himself in Motown, instead of Rider.

A frontline of Shaq, Nick Anderson, and Rogers scares me, if he falls that far. The big question: can Quinn Buckner convince Webber to sign?

When Brent Price, who was shut down by Anton Brown two seasons ago when UMass destroyed Oklahoma, is starting point guard for the Bullets, I have two words for you: Bobby Hurley. Enough said.

Did you see them?

• Matt Puopolo and Chris St. Amand — If the NBA ever decided to allow fighting, my advice to any general manager is sign these two up. If there's a fight, you'll find Matt and Saint. I guess you can call them lucky.

• The Big O, Oliver Miller, and his coming-of-age party during overtime on Sunday in the win against the Lakers.

UMass to play Hofstra

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

A year after being left out of the big show, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is back under the big tent of the NCAA Division I lacrosse tournament.

The Gorillas, who finished their regular season at 10-4 and are seeded 11th, will begin the 12-team, a single elimination tournament Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. in Hempstead, N.Y. against sixth-seeded Hofstra.

According to UMass coach Ted Garber, there are no complimentary tickets and Hofstra expects a sellout. So, fans hoping to make the trip should contact the ticket office today.

UMass is competing in their 11th NCAA tournament and their seventh in eight years. They are 2-10 in NCAA games, with their most recent win coming in 1989 over Cornell.

Garber is optimistic about UMass' chances to advance through their tournament draw, including a possible second-round contest at the Carrier Dome versus Syracuse.

"The great thing is anything can happen, and if we put together three solid games we could be national champions," Garber said. "I'm happy for the players. They worked hard."

"We have to play disciplined, solid fundamental lacrosse," Garber said of the Gorillas' game plan against Hofstra. "Last time [a 16-8 loss] we hadn't practiced outside. I think we're a little different lacrosse team than we were last time."

Last season, the Gorillas found themselves "on the bubble" for a variety of reasons. This season, UMass is in, and three other bubble teams whom UMass beat — Brown, Duke and Rutgers — will only get into tournament games if they pay the price of admission like everyone else.

The NCAA routinely "reshuffles" the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll and bases its seeds on strength of schedule and victories against ranked teams. This is part of the reason some teams, in this case, Brown (10-4) and Duke (9-5), were left out.

"I think Duke and Brown would love to be in our situation," Garber said.

With these criteria in mind, one can see how Hofstra, despite losing their last four games, was still awarded the

Erving hailed as basketball's ambassador

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN
Julius Erving at last night's ceremony.

SPRINGFIELD — Twenty-five years ago Monday, Julius Erving was finishing his senior year of high school, preparing for a fall trip to the Pioneer Valley and the University of Massachusetts as an incoming freshman.

Twenty-five years later Monday night, the man known around the world simply as "Dr. J" returned to the Pioneer Valley to be enshrined in the National Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield.

Erving, who broke many scoring and rebounding records despite playing only two varsity seasons at the University, went on to become one of the game's greatest players with the Virginia Squires and New York Nets of the American Basketball Association and the Philadelphia 76ers of the National Basketball Association.

"When I began a long journey many years ago in Hempstead, New York playing in the Salvation Army armory, I wasn't very good because I couldn't shoot," Erving said at last night's enshrinement dinner. "That was at the age of 8, and at the age of 37, when I retired, people said I still couldn't shoot.

"I feel very proud standing here tonight. This is a very momentous occasion, a very special occasion. It occurs to me that it wasn't just my professional career which got me enshrined, it was the foundation, the work ethic, the realization that the game of basketball wasn't my whole life, but just a part of it."

Erving entered the University in the fall of 1968 and played freshman ball for the 1968-69 season, averaging 18.2 points and 14.2 rebounds on an undefeated 15-0 team.

Freshmen were not allowed to play varsity back then, and fans awaited the 1969-70 season, Erving's first year of varsity. Expectations abounded, and the Collegian in Dec. 2 of that year assessed the 6-foot-5, 185-pound Erving:

"With tremendous body control and jumping ability, Erving has that special ability to excite crowds..."

In his first varsity game at UMass, Erving broke the school record for rebounds by grabbing 28 boards. He also scored 24 second-half points that night. In his collegiate career, Erving was one of only seven players ever to average more than 20 points (26.3) and rebounds (20.2) per game.

Leaving UMass after his junior year, Erving played two years in Virginia before moving on to the Nets, with whom he won a ABA title, three MVP awards and the first-ever slam dunk contest.

Erving played 11 seasons with the 76ers, from 1976 to 1987. He was named to the All-Star team every year, and in 1980 was named to the NBA's 35th Anniversary All-Time Team. In 1983, Erving led the 76ers to the NBA Championship.

"Dr. J, to me, was the greatest forward ever to play the game," said Dominique Wilkins on the video presentation accom-

Minutewomen place seventh

By ANTHONY GUIDO
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts played host to the 1993 women's track and field New England Championships. It was an exciting two-day event at Llewelyn Derby track.

The University of Connecticut ran away with the team title, racking up an impressive 158 points. Boston University was second with 83 points, edging Northeastern by one.

UMass had a good showing with 35 points, finishing seventh. That was expected for a team far from full strength.

"Fifth overall would have been astounding, but we would have needed everyone to have a great day," UMass Coach Julie LaFrenniere said.

One highlight for UMass was Diane Ozzolek's third place performance in the hammer throw. She set the school record with a throw of 49.18 meters.

Natalie Hart came in third in the discus. Hart battled the flu all weekend, keeping her out of the shot put as well as hurting her discus throwing.

The 4x800 meter relay team came in second to BU, narrowly missing the school record with a 9:06.91. The team features Becky Johnson, Kerry Aker, Jen Melvin and Lennice Johnson.

The 1500 meter may have been the most exciting event. Johnson went out extremely fast going along with Christine Stief of BU, Amy Randolph and Natalie Davy of Providence. Johnson ran out of gas in the last 100 meters and finished ninth, with Rudolph winning in 4:20.71.

Julie Moreau came in fifth in the grueling 10,000 meter. Only later did Moreau disclose that she also had been sick. Janey Meeks struggled a bit in the triple jump, finishing second.

"I felt sluggish all day, I just couldn't get loose to jump", Meeks said.

Another great event was the Heptathalon. UConn's Terry Roy dominated the field, amassing a score of 5,312 points. Although UMass freshmen Megan O'Neill was at her first big meet, O'Neill had a strong fifth place finish with 3,938 points.

Now the 4x800 meter relay team, along with Hart, Ozzolek, Moreau, and Meeks, travel to Fairfax, Virginia for the ECAC Championships this weekend. Almost 80 schools will be represented on the campus of George Mason University.

Minutemen place third in ECCs

By MATT VAUTOUR
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's track team continued their success this season, finishing third at last weekend's Eastern Conference Championships at Holy Cross.

Both Pat Reed and Ted Towse turned in their top performances of the season, earning first place in their respective events.

In the 1,500 meters Reed, stayed with the pack for most of the race, before kicking in a 60 second final lap to win going away with a time of 3:57.06 seconds.

Towse, on the other hand took the lead early and never looked back. He blew out the rest of the field with a time of 32:26.23 seconds, beating the rest of the field by almost 30 seconds.

In their first conference meets, freshmen Mark Lefebvre and Rich Dupuis turned in their personal best. Lefebvre's shot put throw of 48 feet 3 inches was good for third place, beating his personal best by a foot.

Dupuis' 180 feet 5 inches javelin throw earned fourth place, but more significantly, it was almost 10 feet further than his previous best.

"The two championship performances by the two freshmen was definitely one of the highlights of the meet," said UMass Head Coach Ken O'Brien. "I'm very pleased with that performance."

Tom Galligani, who has been one of UMass' most consistent scorers all year, was the only Minuteman to place in the top five in to events. His 46 feet 2 inches placed third in the triple jump, and his 22 feet 2 inches, earned him fourth, right behind teammate Joe Kourafas (22 feet 7.5 inches)

In a hotly contested 100 meters, Lyonel Benjamin, finished second, to Troy Seville of Central Connecticut.

Rick Copley, continued his impressive year in the Mock draft puts Webber in Dallas

"There's not one guy who sets the tone on our team... if one guy did everything, we wouldn't be a team. We'd be the Chicago Bulls." — John Salley

As we've reached the end of yet another semester here at the University of Massachusetts, it is time to reflect on what has really affected this space's view on the campus sports world in general. Of course, before I focus on the hardwood.

First of all, I have spent a lot of time this semester skipping classes and following the UMass softball team. UMass softball possesses a certain spark that is unexplainable, even for me. And even more impressive, are the numerous cheers the Minutewomen can rattle off at the crack of a bat.

So good luck to the softball bunch, heading to Allentown, Pa. Bring home another title.

Jordan reigns supreme

John Salley made the comments in my opening during the 1990 Playoffs, when he was a member of the Bad Boys. Chicago went on to win the next two years. Whenever the chips are stacked against the Bulls, it seems they want it more.

No matter how much he has done, Michael Jordan will be seen as the underdog throughout the rest of the playoffs. How do you think he feels?

Even though the Bulls have won two championships in a row, every expert likes the Knicks to knock them off. Not I. After the first round of action, my two finalists, Seattle and the Bulls, are still alive.

I'm really happy that Reggie Lewis may play again, but the Celtics must look to the future to salvage the present.

NBA Draft preview

Here are my predictions for the lottery [this order is how I think the lottery will play out. Remember, it is hard to predict luck]:

1. Dallas Mavericks: Chris Webber; 2. Golden

Officer testifies military no place for his gay son

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Marine colonel told senators in riveting testimony Tuesday that if the military ends its ban on openly gay members he will tell his sons to stay out especially the one who is homosexual. He said he would fear for the young man's life.

The senators also heard strong testimony from Gulf War commander H. Norman Schwarzkopf, who said lifting the ban would deeply harm morale, leaving listless troops like the Iraqis "who sat in the deserts of Kuwait" as the allies rolled through."

The testimony came before the Senate Armed Services Committee, which is holding extended hearings on President Clinton's proposal to lift the ban.

Col. Fred Peck, familiar to many Americans as the spokesman for U.S. forces in Somalia, described his son, Scott, as the military's ideal — a strapping 6 foot 1, blond, blue-eyed senior at the University of Maryland. But he is a homosexual, the colonel said.

"I love him. I love him as much as I do any of my sons but I don't think he should serve in the military," he said.

Homosexuals, even those who hide their sexuality, are disruptive to the service, and they face the threat of death at the hands of their comrades, Peck said.

The Campaign for Military Service, an amalgam of groups opposed to the ban, immediately issued a statement saying that prejudice motivated Peck to "sell out his own son to the ignorance and fear."

Two Democrats on the Senate panel, chairman Sam Nunn of Georgia and J. James Exon of Nebraska, have spoken of a possible compromise; not questioning recruits about their sexual orientation, imposing a strict code of conduct and not ferreting out homosexuals.

However, gays would not be allowed to serve openly.

Clinton: not a Vietnam

May send U.S. peacekeepers to Balkans

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Tuesday he is considering sending U.S. troops to the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia as part of a U.N. force to keep the war in Bosnia from spreading.

The president discussed the possibility of sending troops to Macedonia in a two-hour meeting with senators after returning from a trip to Illinois.

"It's certainly an option that is active and being considered," Sen. Sam nunn, the chariman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, told reporters afterward.

Nunn said Clinton intended to pursue the idea with European allies. Despite the allies' hesitation, Nunn said, "I don't think the president is backing off."

Questions about U.S. military involvement in Bosnia confronted Clinton during a visit to the Chicago suburb of Bensenville. Challenged by a high school student to square his call for military action in Bosnia with his Vietnam opposition, Clinton said there is "much more we can do" without getting mired in a Vietnam-like conflict.

He said of the idea of peace-deeping troops in Macedonia, "It's been discussed but no final decision has been made," The goal of such a deployment, said White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers, would be "to keep the war from spilling over into other areas."

Clinton told a gymnasium audience at Fenton High School in Bensenville: "We want to try to confine that conflict so it doesn't spread into other countries like Albania, Greece and Turkery."

Clinton, shaking hands with a crowd in Elk Grove, Ill., before returning to Washington, was asked several times about Bosnia.

"The United States cannot go in there and get involved in the civil war," he told one man. But he added that there were other ways for the United States and its allies to pressure the warring parties to end the fighting.

Several people urged him not to send U.S. troops and one asked Clinton if sanctions would be enough. He said, "They're working, but not fast enough."

Sen. Joesph Biden, who supports U.S. military force in Bosnia, unleashed a scathing attack on European allies, calling their lack of action to stop the killing of Muslims there "moral rape."

When Richard D. O'Brien took office as interim chancellor two years ago in the mist of a $20 million dollar budget shortfall, he said the University's faculty union proposed the "run out of gas approach."

"They believed we should make no accommodations and proceed until about February or March and watch the budget come to an end, then send the students home," O'Brien said. "It was a recipe for disaster. It wasn't fair for the students."

In the first month of his term, O'Brien said he was at the Statehouse in Boston every week, working with the legislature. Reproached by former University President E.K. Fretwell and the Board of Trustees for not handling matters centrally, O'Brien said he "dealt less and less with the legislature as the end of my term approached. I am most pleased about the fact that we have managed to weather some terrible budget years."

"Two years ago he assumed the helm of what would mainly be called a sinking ship and has steered it into more stable water — for that he has deserved some credit," said Student Trustee Kevin Newnan, who has worked very closely with O'Brien and is graduating in a few weeks. "I took office the day he took office and I will leave the day he will leave office."

O'Brien said he is proud the University has managed to replace more faculty each year. Every year 80 faculty members leave. Last year six faculty were replaced. This year's plan is to replace 23, and next year the University is seeking to replace 65, O'Brien said.

The relationship between student leaders and the administration has greatly improved in the last two years, O'Brien said. Campus student leaders, who O'Brien said he has worked with closely, have done a good job.

"I think down deep he meant well, but he didn't have enough skin for the job. You had to push him to the wall to have him do anything," said former student government President Jennifer Wood.

O'Brien has come far in dealing with students and their concerns, said student government President David Nuñez, who took office April 1.

"I think he is doing a good job right now. He is leaving with grace," Nuñez said. "I wish him the best."

O'Brien said the "nicest" thing that he has done for students is to invite Thomas Robinson to be vice chancellor for Student Affairs. O'Brien said

Drinking alcohol more dangerous for women

Editor's note: All names have been changed at the request of participants.

By DONNA GILMAN
Collegian Correspondent

"The later you stay at a frat party, the less women there are," Jessica, a senior management major, said. "It's scary. You're too drunk to worry about safety. You have a sense that nothing can hurt you. You can take on the world. You walk alone at night, something you wouldn't normally do."

Many women at UMass report taking risks when they drink that they would not normally take, such as walking alone at night, hitching rides or going home with someone.

It is estimated that about 75 percent of the men and at least 55 percent of the women involved in acquaintance rapes or violence had been drinking just before the attack.

"We were not always 100 percent cautious when we drank," Caroline said. "We would drive, or we would meet up with a guy and sleep in his room. If one of our friends went home with a guy, we would say 'She's fine' even though we wouldn't have said that if we hadn't been drinking at all."

This daredevil attitude leads many women to abandon their usual sense of caution, putting themselves in positions that would otherwise strike them as dangerous.

A great deal of attention has been given to the subject of alcohol awareness on college campuses across the nation, but the drinking habits of women, in particular, are only recently being studied. Issues of increased tolerance levels, possible damage to fertility and womens' safety on campus are getting more publicity.

On the whole, women who drink consume less alcohol than men, but among the heaviest drinkers, women equal or surpass men in the number of problems related to their drinking, according to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcholism.

Studies suggest women may be more vulnerable than men to the physiological consequences of drinking. The Institute says drinking may be associated with increased risk for breast cancer, menstrual disorders, decreased fertility, cirrhosis of the liver and early menopause.

"The first time I got drunk and threw up it was from two glasses of wine," said Julie, an art history graduate student. "By senior year, I could drink a pitcher of beer by myself."

Women have a higher proportion of body fat and, correspondingly, lower amounts of water in their bodies, according to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcholism.

Therefore, a woman and a man drinking the same amount of alcohol would have different blood alcohol levels. Hers will be higher because she has less water in which to dilute the alcohol.

The Residential Education Alcohol Program in John Quincy Adams in the Southwest Residential Area attempts to make both female and male students question their reasons for drinking and compel them to take a critical look at the drinking scene at UMass.

Students are referred to REAP if they violate the alcohol policy in their residence halls, and about 20 percent of the referrals are women.

Many students see the program as a punishment since the alternative to participating is losing their housing assignment. But once they are enrolled in the program, many students come to praise REAP.

"Before I was sent to REAP, I never thought anything about my drinking," said Caroline, a graduate of UMass. "REAP helped me sort my feelings out, made me think that maybe I shouldn't be drinking so heavily."

Sandra Whitcomb, coordinator of REAP, said women are at risk when their judgement is impaired.

"The women started college drinking two or three beers, but that frequently escalates over the course of

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN EXPERIENCE PAYS.

Three 8-year-olds found dead

By JAMES JEFFERSON
Associated Press

WEST MEMPHIS, Ark. — Chris was a big talker with a passion for cartwheels and watercolors. Steve was the straight-A student who loved to read. Michael, the jester, once showed up in class in his father's Navy uniform.

The three 8-year-olds were best friends who bicycled everywhere in their leafy neighborhood in this blue-collar Mississippi River town.

A week ago, they rode off on their bikes and never came back.

Their bodies, bound at the hands and feet, were found a mile away the next day in shallow creek running through Robin Hood Hill, a wooded play area popular with children but disliked by some parents.

Chris Byers, Steven Edward Branch and Michael Moore all died of blows to the head, investigators say. They refused to comment on reports that the boys were sexually mutilated.

Residents are grief-stricken and jittery, willing to do anything to help, wishing they had some answers.

"They're mad and they're scared. Everyone's wracking their brain to try to help the police," said James Presley, a clerk at J&B Grocery near where the bodies were found.

"Rumors are a dime a dozen, everything from gangs to cults are floating around. We try not to pay any attention. . . but we just don't know."

Police have gone door to door. Investigators are checking hundreds of telephone tips. The FBI is developing a psychological profile. But so far, the search for suspects appears to be fruitless

A third of the 70 police officers in West Memphis, a town of 28,000 across the river from its glitzy Tennessee neighbor, have been assigned to the case. Transients have been rounded up and questioned.

Robinson has "revolutionized the attitudes as well as structures for student affairs."

O'Brien has been supportive of multiculturalism, and has come to appreciate members of the campus community, Robinson said.

"His commitment will have a long-lasting effect at this University," Robinson said.

In response to the Oct. 3, 1992 racial attack on Arlens Barosy, a resident assistant on the 17th floor of Washington Tower, students stormed Washington Tower on Oct. 9 looking for the assaults' hosts.

O'Brien said he worked with minority students, negotiating the renaming of Columbus Day, and changing the physical arrangements of the four cultural centers and academic centers for minority students. Student negotiators and O'Brien found ways for minority students to get involved with hiring faculty and multicultural updates, O'Brien said.

But Nuñez said he would liked to have seen some sort of public announcement of what happened.

Another significant event during O'Brien's tenure was the May 1, 1992 rally on the Student Union steps, protesting the verdict in the Rodney King beating trial, when about 250 students poured into the Collegian offices.

Over the course of the following week protestors made several demands including that the women's issues page be reinstated and a co-editor of color for the women's issues page be added. The editors moved the paper off campus temporarily and continued production from alternative locations.

Although he acknowledged the University got bad press, O'Brien blames the management of the Collegian for not responding to minority students' needs. O'Brien said he is glad he took a hands-off approach to the incident.

"To be frank about it, I am still not entirely sure what ought to have happened. I am very dismayed by the principle features of the event — the seizing of newspapers by one group, the breaking of a window, the general hubb," O'Brien said. "That was all dismal stuff. And I do ask myself, 'should I have intruded in on the system?'"

"Should I'd have said, 'people this may be an RSO [Registered Student Organization], but nevertheless you will do x, y, z?' And I image by doing so, I could have avoided that mess. I still think it would have been the wrong thing to do. At the time I still felt, and I still do, that I was going to take a basically hands-off approach, unless there was danger to life or limb involved."

By playing the part as "an honest broker" the situation has resolved itself, O'Brien said.

"We now have a editor who is a minority, and I have excellent relations with him as I never did with the group that was involved at the time," O'Brien said.

At the same time as the Collegian takeover, about 350 students, from the Rodney King rally on the Student Union steps, stormed into Whitmore demanding 10 new faculty members of color, five women and five men. The protesters staged a nine hour sit-in.

Calling the take-over, "a large scale visitation," O'Brien said, the protestors "had a misunderstanding about the rate at which we were hiring minority faculty. . . We were already doing very well. In fact, in a single year we've hired 11 faculty members."

But Nuñez said O'Brien engaged in a tug of war with students causing the situation to get worse.

"He had no clue in dealing with students," Nuñez said.

During his second year as chancellor, O'Brien said he encouraged the Special Opportunity Fund, which has brought 45 minority faculty to the campus.

When David K. Scott becomes the University's permanent chancellor on July 1, O'Brien said he is going on a full-year sabbatical leave.

"I have an opportunity to write, and think about what I want to do for a year. I am a tenured member of biochemistry and molecular biology, so one of my options is to come back and teach in that department," said O'Brien, who has been the provost and the executive vice chancellor during his nine-year stay at the University.

"But I think I might have another career in me. I have had one career as a experimental scientist, and then another career as a University administrator. I don't know. A part of me would like to explore something completely different, in the business or corporate world."

O'Brien closer to negotiating smoking ban

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

After conferring with several constituent groups about a policy to establish a smoke-free UMass-Amherst campus, Chancellor Richard O'Brien said he is almost ready to negotiate.

"I must get the facts together and see if we can provide adequate smoking areas for people which will not be hazardous," O'Brien said.

O'Brien said he will then meet with the University Staff Association, which is a union for the University's classified employees, to discuss creating a policy.

"The U.S.A. Union members told me, 'If you want to stop smoking (on the University campus), you've got to negotiate with us,'" said O'Brien, noting that there is a clause in their contract which says members must be provided with a place to smoke.

The policy originally proposed by O'Brien would allow smoking only in designated guest rooms at the Campus Center hotel and certain University-owned and leased individual rooms and apartments, including the residence halls in accordance with policy established by Housing Services.

Various constituent groups at the University have voted on O'Brien's proposal throughout the semester.

The Faculty Senate voted Feb. 18; the policy was approved.

The Graduate Student Senate voted Feb. 23; the policy was not approved by a vote of 14-6.

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted April 21; the policy was approved by a vote of 32- 12. Senate President David Nuñez opposed the policy, advocating the rights of smokers, while Student Trustee-elect Al Lizana favored the policy.

O'Brien said Senior Staff, a group composed of University administrators, voted in favor of the policy and he is still awaiting an opinion from the SEIU, the union representing non-faculty professional staff workers.

O'Brien said he has conferred with Paul Page, vice chancellor of administration and finance, on establishing a way to provide smokers with an area which is entirely separated from non-smokers, instead of implementing the stricter policy he initially proposed.

"I would prefer to provide an opportunity for people to smoke if they could do it without passing it on to non-smokers," O'Brien said

"The way we do it now is wrong," O'Brien said, citing smoking within cafeterias as an example where proper ventilation is not being provided.

Committee seeks student input

Students surveyed in search for Housing director

By TROY L. MERRICK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts' Housing Services held a second student response forum for its director of housing search last night in Franklin and Hampden Dining Commons.

The director position is responsible for the management of the sixth largest residence hall system in the country, and Bob Campbell, administrator for Housing Services, says he feels the process has been narrowed down to "an excellent pool of candidates to represent the community.

"We have seven finalists from approximately 34 nationwide applicants, from Arizona, Georgia, and North Carolina to name a few," he said. "They all have demonstrated the characteristics and skills necessary to the director position."

Surveys were passed out to students in the dining halls asking them to note what they felt were the most important qualities and areas that the director should address. The concerns expressed at last night's forum, held in the Worcester Dining Commons, were housing assignments, residence hall programming, and security.

"The search committee is comprised of people from Housing Services here at the University, professors, and those in the student population," Campbell said. "Of course we want students involved in choosing someone making these kinds of policies."

Committee members include Campbell; Esther Terry, chair of the African American studies department; Mathew L. Ouellett, area director of Orchard Hill-Central; Melton Miller, dean of the College of Engineering; Jo-Anne Vanin, dean of students; and others including students Michelle Williams and Sandra Rose, and Urmi Sen, graduate student.

The committee is seeking someone with a minimum of seven years of progressively responsible experience in housing and who possesses competence in aspects such as residential education, housing assignments, telecommunications, maintenance/operations, budget and finance, and microfridge rentals.

The candidate also needs to have experience in handling student topics like racial and ethnic groups, student governments, alcohol and drugs, and gender roles.

"If two or three of the candidates are considered, we'll forward their applications on to Vice Chancellor Thomas Robinson," Campbell said. "From there we get the community response, then interview them with a series of questions we've formulated from student and campus concerns."

"We're committed to bringing in candidates that reflect those concerns and those who will help make the quality of our own housing program number one in the nation," Ouellett said. "We wanted to be really aggressive in seeking out student voices and opinions, as the hardest thing on this campus, because of the size, is the effort to be heard."

One-woman show sports education about copulation

With the approach of summer, Suzi Landolphi will bring her one-woman show "Hot, Sexy and Safer" to turn up the temperature even more in Bowker Auditorium Thursday.

Landolphi, a self-described "comedienne with a message" said her show is part theater, part stand-up and part lecture with a large amount of audience participation.

In 1982, Landolphi became involved with the AIDS Action Committee in Boston. She was a volunteer in the program.

"At that time we didn't even know it was a virus," Landolphi said. "We knew it wasn't airborne and transmission occurred in a difficult manner."

Graduation: time to set aside the flimflam and say so long

When I started writing this column I set to change the world. I've come somewhat short of that goal but I tried.

There was the Danny Colbert story. Danny was a one-year-old boy with leukemia, and was in desperate need of a bone marrow transplant. His brother, a UMass student, sought help in the college community and thousands of dollars were raised. Little Danny eventually found a donor.

There was the story on Somalia and how thousands of people were staving to death on a daily basis. Soon U.S. forces intervened and presently relief has changed the situation drastically. I felt proud of those soldiers who were asked to do the near impossible.

I wrote on gays in the military and how it wasn't really an issue, but more importantly it was a presidential order. I'm still waiting for that outcome, I'm giving Bill a few more weeks to do something about it.

Then there was Svetlana Speyer and her struggle to keep her job and raise her child her way and not by what society says is the right way. Last I heard she's still trying to balance both. Good luck, Svetlana.

I wrote about Arlens Barosy and racism on this campus. This story still has no end, though I hope some day soon it will.

In November I caught Hell for endorsing Ross Perot for president. And if I had the chance to do it again — I'd still endorse Ross, so there.

I supported Sinead O'Connor after she ripped a photo of the Pope. She expressed herself courageously on national television. She was condemned by everyone who considers the church untouchable, well it's not and she did. I stand by her convictions.

David
RIVERA

I wrote about an evangelist preacher who came to UMass to save our souls. I caught Hell from the pious element on campus but, hey, I've got one name for them: Koresh.

I wrote about Doris Cruz and her personal experiences with racism in Amherst. Her attacks may have ended but there are thousands of others that go on everyday. So it really hasn't ended for anyone.

I wrote about marijuana and how evil and decadent it is. I received tons of letters from spleefed-out flunkies with too much time on there hands. Keep smoking, guys.

Much can happen to you in four years, and much has. You learn and grow, you succeed and fail and succeed again. You love, you hate and hopefully love again. You experience life and death, and you go on.

I, like many students, lost a family member while I was at college. It's with heavy heart that I remember my grandmother. I wish she could have lived long enough to see me graduate.

I want to thank my Collegian colleagues. They work day in and day out for little or no reward. To say working at the paper is thankless job would be a severe understatement. They sacrifice too much and only those who know the daily adventure of newspaper making can understand. No flimflam, you guys are the best. I so young. . .

Like many of you, I will leave UMass and never see some of my friends ever again. Sure promises to keep in touch are made but it's inevitable that time and distance will end friendships. So I want to thank all my pals who have, in their own ways, given me great memories and events that will be with me forever.

"Graduation is more than getting a diploma," Reid Russell, a friend of mine told me. "It's what you've become." He was never more correct.

Be good, and goodbye.

What are you kids, stupid?!

Summer's almost here. Yay. Whoopie. Cool. And while most of you will either be out starting your new lives or home experiencing really cool summer things I'll be stuck in wonderful downtown Marlboro and working as a god-damned clown at the Ground Round.

Yeah, what can I say? Some people are just blessed.

Cutter
GARCIA

For a little over a month now I've been sharing parts of my pitiful existence with you through a silly little thing on the comics page. And I've just got to tell you — your responses have been amazing.

I've been fortunate enough to meet so many new people because of it and there's no better feeling in the world than when somebody tells you that you've made them laugh.

It gives me a boner actually. Heh, heh, heh.

But the one thing I've noticed the most (besides the fact that there is most definitely a prurient interest to be fed on this campus) is the stupidity of some of you idiots. You ask me questions Benny on "...A. Law" would laugh at.

So here for you now is the list of, Stupid Questions People Ask Me About *"Cutter's World." Hopefully it'll help to clear some things up, especially down Southwest way.

Does it mean that you and Slokes are gay because you jumped out of a closet and did kinky things to him in a batman suit?

What are you — retarded? It's a comic strip kids. Calvin ain't real, Hobbes doesn't really talk and the only true Far Side is the left half of Gary Larson's brain.

Plus, I ripped my batman suit last summer and haven't been able to find a tailor to fix it yet. Heh, heh, heh.

Is Melrose really full of tough-guys?

Is the circus filled with clowns? Is Waco full of ashes? Is UMass full of liberal hippy freaks?

There's a sign when you drive into Melrose that says, "Welcome to Melrose — But we're not responsible if you decide to get out of the car!" If you do decide to go though, don't forget to pack your gun; all the cool kids will be wearing one!

Why are you such a pig and why do all the women have "Ws" on their chests?

A. I'm just trying to give the feminists a reason to take over a building so that I can get more material. And B. Because I tried using a "Q" but it didn't look enough like breasts.

Why do you make fun of the cops so much?

Because Professor Karen List says in her Journalism and Law class that it's my responsibility as a good American to use the Watch Dog Function and the First Amendment.

And she just won a Distinguished Teacher Award, so that means my ass is covered.

And finally: Do chicks really dig you? Are you just using the strip for your own sordid purposes? And how do you feel about female fans approaching you drunk at parties?

1. Of course! 2. Wouldn't you? And 3. Heh, heh, heh.

Cutter Garcia is an extremely confused Collegian staff member.

The Turnpike of Time

In her rear view mirror she could see the towers loom like skyscrapers and the library caught in the setting sun's glow. The playing fields illuminated in the horizon and the flags from the mall danced in the wind.

She drove away from that vast land, kind of like a bird in flight only she didn't know where she was headed, if the sun would burn her wings to what storm would come up through the clouds next, but she knew she possessed a sort of freedom.

E.C.
THOMAS

She flicked her cigarette out the window. The passing breeze carried it to the street, where it burst into a hundred sparks, like an exploding firecracker. The cigarette, the semester — the sparks, bits and pieces of memories. The world, the country, the school. Bits and pieces that when put together make up the puzzle of a collegiate year.

The World Trade Center, Waco, Rodney King, a new chancellor, the Mullins Arena, the Blue Wall, dorms, kegs, frats, legalization, PVTA, Amherst residents, the Collegian, Spring Concert, add/drop, exams, papers — friends, graduation, a year in the life?

"You seem like you have a good grip on where you're headed," and I thought bartenders knew everything . . .I thought the world was within my reach, and my emotions were in my back pocket. But on this road to Somewhere — nothing is ever for sure. Maybe that's what college is all about.

At the end of each year you reach a sort of intersection: straight, left, right, backward. Your friends go one way, your lovers another, and you, well, you go your own. Goodbyes are sort of like stoplights.

After the summer, some roads come together, some hit a dead end, and others, you'll never drive down again. Where did it all go? Where have they all gone? Where will they be? Will they be back? Where am I?

Hearing the music from those restless nights. Somewhere between the Chili Peppers, the Dead and Ice-T lay the prophesied words of what is inside us at some point: anger, love, loneliness, confusion, frustration, lust, hate and content. They told us how we felt, they expressed what we sometimes couldn't. . . and at times they made it all make sense. The music: a college life with harmony. Do you ever wonder when you switch the tape to Barry Manilow as you drive through the cow fields, suburbs and cities?

Feeling the days and months of insecurity and confusion. Somehow between letting go and getting attached, you cried the tears, broke some hearts and laughed with a sappy glee. You played the games, and were a pawn in some. From friends to strangers, seven kisses never seemed so real; seven kisses never seemed so weird; seven kisses never seemed so forgotten. Do you ever wonder just who that lone hitchiker really is, where he's going or where he's been?

Seeing the weeks and months of frustration. Sometime between coffee, beer and vodka — you let your thoughts roll — on whatever, wherever, whomever, thoughts that eventually made up a year in the life. Thoughts that like the dividing yellow lines made up some sort of direction, or disappeared at the edge of an exit ramp. Do you ever wonder when the road signs will begin to make sense?

College: a chaotic cornucopia. College, the rest stop along this turnpike of time.

"It seems like it was just such a waste," she said, the sun giving her blonde hair an angelic glow — and her face a withdrawn stare. A waste of time that some might like to forget — and a part of your life you never will.

Thoughts on a relationship's end

There is a time in everyone's life when an event can radically change you. In history, these events are revolutions and they can often be violent. In an individual's life, the violence of a personal revolution occurs in the mind, and for the last five weeks there have been a thousand battles played out in what's left of mine.

When two lovers cast aside their strings to regain their independence and themselves, little earthquakes ripple and run from their being. I, personally, have been searching for something to stop these quakes.

The bottle was my first choice. Reading and working were two other attempts, but it wasn't until skinny dipping at Puffers Pond that the cold reality of everything hit me. The immenseness. All the stars and all the fish, and me.

I no longer believe in true love, but that isn't giving into pessimism. There is such a thing as true happiness after we are honest enough to accept it.

In Kundera's Unbearable Lightness of Being, he writes of how one man's love of his life could have just as easily been someone else's, had one of them turned a different corner. Instead of "it must be so" as true love indicates, it's rather "it could just as well be otherwise."

Night has finally fallen and the battles in my brain are at rest knowing I didn't just lose the great thing ir my life, but I've only just taken a step to the next great one.

I respect her, my ex-girlfriend, and what we had. But most importantly I respect myself, and in the end, that is all that really matters.

Off campus has ups and downs

Here we are, our last issue for the spring semester. It has undoubtedly been the proverbial long, strange trip for most of us. But now that the end is here, I don't really want it to be over. Honest. Well, OK, maybe some things, like studying, have gotten old. And I am looking forward to a summer job as a professional suntanner.

But the people who I see and spend time with day in and day out are what has made this semester the best in a long while. The traditional difficult parting at the end of the semester makes a person realize even more how tenuous relationships can be.

Francis
ZERA

Is there a lesson in that? One of the drawbacks to a college education is that a person starts to see a lesson in everything, and who knows where that will lead.

College, like anything, is what you make of it. If you spend all of your time studying diligently, working hard and being dedicated to your goals, you will come out with a fine education, but with no social skills.

Having lived off campus for my entire collegiate career, I didn't realize just how much of my education I was missing until recently.

Living alone, and well off-campus, I don't have to deal with a bad (or good) roommate, noisy neighbors, or somebody puking on my doorstep every weekend. I don't have to deal with dorm security, the dining commons or with the horrors of Health Services.

But the down side is also that I don't have to deal with that (okay, so I don't mind missing the post-Twisters hurling contests). I haven't realized just how anal I'd been getting until I started attending a few "training" parties for the big end of semester parties, and spending time with my friends outside of the classrooms and the Collegian office.

There is no dried toothpaste on my bathroom mirror from a sleepy roommate, no beer can pyramids in my windows, and no multi-colored, mobile fungi growing in the back of my fridge because it's not my turn to clean it out. I'd probably flip if someone walked into my place with muddy shoes or set their beer on the coffee table without a coaster.

Living with another person forces you to deal with someone who is not as organized as you are, or who is an even bigger slob. (Remember "The Odd Couple"?) Sharing living spaces with another person keeps things in perspective, and teaches (there's that word again!) one a little diplomacy.

So before you begin to fill out those off-campus housing request forms for next fall, think a minute about what you'll be missing. How many dorm war stories can you think of? How many people do you consider to be good friends on your floor? Do you want to start to worry about dusting? Stop the evil before it starts.

So, the great Nathan sails to the UK

Goodbye balconies. Goodbye ducks. Goodbye graffitti.

I must go back to the sea again, to the lonely sea and the sky. Yes, the poetic appeals from high school graduation have kicked in and I know it is time to finally take the road less travelled by. The yellow wood of England hails me and I must leave this weary place and sail away for a year so I can learn how to talk funny and be laughed at for wearing plaid. So much to learn.

Nathan
CRICK

And yet with all the thrill of finally going on that great journey into nowhere, I must consider the grim possibility that I may never return. The IRA might mistake me for one of their own and make me fall in love with a Black woman who is actually a guy. I might get stuck in France when Germany decides its time to kick their collective ass all over Europe again. I might even find myself the antagonist of a soccer riot by saying "Boy, those English really stink don't they?"

So, to be safe, I am documenting my first Will and Testament before my life is put in the hands of a population that consumes extraordinary amounts of marmalade.

To Housing Services I leave: Nothing.

To Chancellor O'Brien I leave: Nothing. .

To the crazy guy who submitted a column to me by throwing it through the crack in my door and running away I leave: Nothing.

To George Bush I leave: Nothing.

To all those who wish to highten their awareness of tolerance and the aspects of a free society by playing the I Am Going To Blatantly Condemn You with a Vast Array of Catchy Names in a Public Forum game I leave: This newspaper. We are here to print any of your righteous diatribes if you ever feel the need to think yourself oh so noble and respectable for your open-mindedness. We even offer slots where we can be taken over for your convenience.

To the Young Americans for Freedom: Bunny rabbits. Lots and lots of bunny rabbits.

To the thieves who stole my chemistry and math books last spring I leave: My chemistry and math books.

To the girl who told me that "this is not a library" when I was reading Time magazine in the Campus Store I leave: The realization that there are many things in this world with which you can trivialize your life and use to make yourself believe that stuff like the unauthorized reading of magazines really matters for a damn thing.

To the staff at the Collegian I leave: The remnants of my soul which has not been warped by you, the best darn group of racist, bigoted, socialist, politically correct, fascist, downright cultural elitist bunch of ignorant lesbians I ever knew.

To Billy Joe Bob I leave: My fish and tackle set.

To my hometown I leave: All the sugar and plain cones you can deal with. You can choose the kind yourself, cause I sure as hell am not going to ask you again.

To the maker of Combos I leave: The torilla and ranch flavored crackers. I just can't deal with that white paste.

To Eustacia and Kent I leave: Your continued existence. As long as the patterns and habits of people continue to amaze me you will continue to mimic the incredible range of opinions that we obliterate in our cute labels of Liberal and Conservative.

To David Scott I leave: The foot worn jacket of leaders past that will be helpful if you choose to lie down and let people walk all over you like a good chancellor.

To the students here at UMass I leave: My apologies. I am sorry, but I am going to England, and I am taking my angst with me.

Biased SATs are poor standard of intelligence

I wish to thank Mr. Wayne Keefe for proving one point: that people should research a topic before they write about that topic. In his letter [Collegian, May 10], he says he is a genius in comparison to "smart kids" who may have problems achieving a score of 700 on their SATs.

What Mr. Keefner fails to take into account is that the SATs are biased. This is not simply an observation from myself, but rather proven in a study. The study in question proved that the SATs are aimed at White, suburban males, not inner-city students such as Weeks or Padilla, let alone females. This is because most suburban high schools offer SAT prep courses, some of which are mandatory. This is because higher education is the "accepted path" of progression from high school.

In most cases, there is no question whether a student will or will not pursue higher education. However, in most inner-city schools, there is hardly any mention of the SATs, if at all. Many inner-city athletes have been quoted as saying that they were completely unaware of the SATs, let alone have been able to do any preparatory work for them. Are you aware that Princeton Review, an SAT review course, costs $700? A "discount" rate from Stanley Kaplan, another test prep program, is $595. This is in the range of most suburbanites, but far out of most inner-city students.

This is not the only level of bias that exists on the SATs. I am sure Mr. Keefner can draw conclusions about the relationship between a cup and a saucer, but not everyone can, because not everyone is aware of what a saucer is. This simple example may sound a little ridiculous to you, but imagine if you were from an inner-city family on welfare. Would you understand that people drink coffee or tea from a cup, which rests on top of a saucer. I doubt it. Now imagine that the entire English section of the SATs is set up in such a manner. It is the combination of these factors that has prompted the Educational Testing Service, the company that administers the SATs, to change the format from multiple choice to an essay test. The new test will be administered in two years.

Mr. Keefner, you also forget that SAT scores do not determine a person's intelligence level. Just because someone does poorly on a standardized test does not necessarily mean a connection with a specific intelligence level.

It could also mean that the person was nervous, hadn't eaten in a few days — countless factors affect performance on such a test. This is why colleges are looking away from SAT scores and taking the entire person into account: their grades, extra-curricular activities, etc. In a few years, the NCAA is switching to a similar system — the higher the grade point average of the athlete, the lower SAT requirement, and vice versa.

As you can see, Mr. Keefner, just because you score above a 700 on your SATs, you are not a genius. You are simply lucky enough to have had the factors working for you, and not against you, such as Tyrone Weeks and Edgar Padilla may have. Maybe you should simply be happy about that, and forget your thoughts about being a genius.

Out into the world I go, some lessons I'll leave behind

The last two years of college, I lost the ability to sit still in a classroom. I'd show up at the beginning of a semester full of confidence that I'd dutifully crawl out of bed and lope down to class at 9:30 a.m. I'd sit there admiring the syllabus, making plans to get a jump on everyone, thinking about how I could write the Great American Novel and use it as a final paper.

Then I'd get restless. The professor or the teaching assistant would stop talking and merely move his or her lips. It was like the teacher was a demented mime, mimicking the very action he or she is not allowed to do: speak. They looked as though they were saying something, but I couldn't hear a damn thing.

So, just after I'd make plans to win a Pulitzer Prize with a labor-intensive, ground-breaking article with gobs and gobs (we're talking big gobs here) of research that would eventually destroy the career of some elected official, I'd leave class early.

I couldn't sit there anymore. I wasn't learning anything.

Afternoon classes didn't fare much better. Worse, actually. By then, I'd have been long immersed in what I considered education outside of the classroom.

Journalism majors, I thought, were given a relatively easy lot in life for a reason. Apparently, the faculty realize the only way to pursue a career in journalism is to actually pursue that career in journalism. You gotta write, dammit. So, that's what I did. I wrote. I wrote a lot and I edited a lot.

But I learned more working in a basement newsroom than how to write so-so and edit passably. I learned something about human nature. I learned something about power and principle. Mainly that many people, no matter how sweet and nice and "sensitive" they are, care more about power and privilege than they do about principle.

Marc
ELLIOTT

But, instead merely launching right into a tirade so full of bile and sarcastic, dark thoughts that it burns out your retinas, allow me to impart upon you some of my wisdom with this warning: this is not for the weak of heart, this is life bucko.

Lesson one: Power corrupts. It's an oldie and goodie, but is it true? You bet. State Sen. Stan Rosenberg provides us with the most recent example. Stan is from Amherst and has backed every worthy, progressive, underdog cause that ever had the misfortune to wander into the Massachusetts Statehouse. He recently introduced a bill eliminating much of the law preventing political hacks from using state employees to pad and run their political efforts at re-election.

Where's Dennis Kelley and his Democracy Campaign when you need it?

Lesson two: Position, Ph.d and titles mean nothing in the relm of respectablility. I've, in my adventures as a Collegian editor, had more professors, academics, people-empowerment-type activists (politicians), cheap political hacks (there are a lot of them around here) lie to me, outright, not a blink. It's quite a feat, and a shame it's so common. But even worse than the mere lies are the lies with just a touch of truth, because you can't throw the whole thing out.

It doesn't matter who's talking. People with fantastic reputations and records for truth-telling, honesty and scrupulous integrity. I've been lied to by the best of them.

Lesson three: Multiculturalism equals money. Journalism sucks. Everyone ends up hating you for it. Multiculturalism, on the other hand, at least the kind Whitmore likes, attracts awards, awards with cash prizes that is. If you need proof, just try to remember the last time the administration, not the student government and student groups now, sponsored an event, with any financial backing, without the words multiculturalism or diversity incorporated in there somewhere.

Lesson four: Law isn't legal on campus. Hey boys and girls! This is a university! Anything goes here. Hell, we voted to make smoking dope legal. So much for 'Just Say No.' Anyone stop to think about the kind of example we're setting for the children of this state? I didn't think so.

Lesson five: You can't pick your friends either. These people will never please you totally all the time. Deal with it, 'cuz yer stuck with them.

Lesson six: A camel is a horse put together by committee. We used to have this thing called Collegian Committee in which we would discuss problems of multiculturalism in the paper. Basically, the people who had problems never showed up and the rest of us were left to be lectured by University officials who, I suspect, thought we were mindless little Satans for not printing "feel good" news about this damn fine diverse campus where everything is beautiful and everyone whistles Zippidee-doo-dah all the day long. Which brings me to. . .

Lesson seven: Politics favor power, not principle. When it looked like the Collegian was defeated by yammering, threatening and sometimes violent (although Whitmore would insist I'm exaggerating that point and that many of these people were true community leaders) protesters, the "hands off" administration suddenly had their hands all over the Collegian's reputation, accusing its staff of all sorts of falacies.

I'll catch all you in the real world. Eh.

Just an animal at the Zoo

Not to sound like a deep profound thinker or anything, but as I reflect back on my year here at the Zoo (yeah, sniff, it's almost gone), I have a mixed bag of feelings. Yeah, I'm positive that my overriding emotion is elatedness that the college stress bus is at its last stop and the summer fun months are waiting to debut once again, but I don't exactly know whether I want to leave just yet.

Lord knows I don't have trouble waving goodbye to getting up for classes, downing Mylanta to soothe the dining commons cramps, or dealing with the bureaucratic demons at any of the offices on campus. Yes, even though I wrote once about how hospitable and friendly the Valley was and how nice a break it was from my former college, I knew there were liabilities around here as well. It's become inevitable.

Troy L.
MERRICK

However, life's not so cruel and inhumane here as many would be led to believe. While they may be a mile or so apart and a pain in the gluteas maximus to get to if you don't have a bike and the PVTA isn't running and/or on schedule (tough call), there are places to go here on campus to have fun and hang out.

And at those places, meeting people from the mini-melting pot or mini-salad bowl (whatever the politically correct term is now) that is UMass is an experience in itself. I think it's a shame that the different ethnic groups don't interact more than they already do, and please don't be naive and condemn me when I recognize that there is still segregation here as nearly everywhere else. It's tough to admit that perhaps it will never be eradicated totally. But hey, I don't mean to go off on a tangent and depress anybody. Where was I. . . oh yeah, the end of the year speech!

There never seems to be enough time to complete every little detail of the college life. I try to catch up on current events, keep my ever-slipping grade point average from reaching new depths by burying my nose in the books, and participate in the plethora of performances, activities and social functions that regularly pop up.

I know the purpose of college is to learn lots of wonderful things about the diverse world around us and become a better person with a polysyllabic vocabulary, and I've tried to be diligent. Really, I have.

But now that the sun has come out from hiding, it's getting tougher and tougher to make those appearances, pen and pad in hand, to the last class sessions.

Not only that, but try dragging yourself to shift after shift in the dining commons where the temperature in the dishroom only rarely hits 130 degrees. Yeah, I not only have to eat there but I have the "insider advantage" of toiling there too.

With this being my junior year, I've gone into much of the core of my major curriculum, and I'm glad to be away from all the nebulous gen-eds. Finally I have some leeway, and can experiment a little with various classes without anyone telling me I need this, that and the other thing.

Having a single has been cool, even though it's in Sylvan and the closet in my room at home is bigger. I can barely turn around without knocking something over, and a transistor radio would seem like surround-sound, but it's home for the last few months. Take whatcha can get.

One blessing I can look back on and smile about is not having been too terribly sick while here. My heart goes out to anyone who had to sit for an hour and a half in the "Health" Center waiting room, puking up blood, only to have some near-sighted woman waddle in and say something about taking aspirin and calling them in the morning. Don't we pay their salaries or something like that?

Anyhow, it's all said and done, no questions asked. Everybody's going to be headed somewhere to find a job, and life will go on inevitably. But just think, no matter where you are under the summer sun — whether you're flipping burgers or actually doing something halfway related to your field of studies — you'll always be an animal at the Zoo.

Still under investigation

Fortunately or not, some things never change.

Upon hearing his story, on March 13, I wrote an editorial about Jason Nietupski, a young man beaten up for no apparent reason. Nietupski was walking alone late at night with his wallet in one hand and a sundae he had just bought in the other.

Confused when a man struck him across the face, he offered both money and food to this group standing behind him, but they did not want to eat or steal. They wanted to beat the crap out of him.

Michael
MORRISSEY

Knowing he was defenseless in stopping them, as they closed in for the kill, who knows what went through Nietupski's mind? Was he thinking, "What did I ever do to deserve this?" Did he say, "I'm gonna die without even graduating college?" or, "I never had the chance to tell ( ) I loved them!"

Yielding to blow after blow, luckily Jason Nietupski did not die that night; he only suffered cuts, bruises and a concussion. But nightmare Part 2 began the next morning, when Nietupski looked for someone to turn to.

Our administration was wary at first, skeptical of Nietupski and the other people who were assaulted by this same group. Walking on eggshells, Whitmore would not announce the attacks as racist when race could have been the only possible motive.

Unsurprisingly, the press, which in the last year and a half has played up every attack on a minority at this school, was snail-like in covering the story.

An obvious page one story the following Monday had the attackers and attackee's races been switched, this story was covered five days later, on a Wednesday.

Belatedly, Channel 40 did a story four nights after the beatings. They spent more time interviewing a minority student not involved with the incident than all four of the beating victims combined.

Racist or not, the administration hasn't addressed the attacks. What has happened since then? Not much. Whitmore is keeping the issue out of the press, and if they did finally announce that the attack was racist, I must not have received the fax.

"I'm pissed off," Nietupski said. "They haven't done anything. They just don't give a [expletive]."

No admittance by the University has been made. The University News Office explains that the matter is still under investigation. It has yet to admit the attack is racist in nature.

Each day, Jason Nietupski stares straight ahead, scanning the horizon for someone from the University to say, "We're here for you, we'll protect you." Nobody appears.

The end of the semester always brings a flood of sentimental columns from graduating seniors. Sorry, members of the PC fan club, but I still have one more year to go. [Insert maniacal laughter here.]

I just want to thank all you folks who read the paper, you're the ones who make it the rag it is. To the people who like my editorials: Mom, I'll be home for supper; guys, I'll bring your money to you tomorrow.

To those opposed: "I told ya, ya should've killed me last year."

Weight room plan will benefit all

The front-page article regarding the varsity weight room [Collegian, April 27] contained inaccurate information and misrepresented the plan being implemented by the athletic administration at this University.

Varsity athletes at UMass are clearly entitled to a venue that allows them to develop strength and improve their physical conditioning. For the past seven years, the only space afforded them has been weight room 1. That facility is not only extremely small, in many cases not able to physically accommodate our larger varsity teams, but is also not available to athletes on a consistent, timely basis.

Our student athletes need to be able to train on a regular basis and with the existing policy this room has only been available for four hours per day. There are over 600 varsity athletes who represent this institution — they also pay a student fee — and fewer than 155 are on scholarship aid. For years, the University has put these student athletes in adverse situations such as training at 6 a.m., attending classes all day and then attending their specific sports practices. The time, commitment and dedication of these student athletes should at least be rewarded with affording them a conducive environment for their strength and conditioning. Their schedules academically and athletically have rigorous demands, and they deserve the opportunity to train during the day, rather than late evenings, early mornings and Sundays.

Over the years, the overuse of the facilities in weight room 1 have rendered it in poor condition for all user groups. Setting this room aside specifically for varsity athletes will allow the room to finally be properly maintained, and it will also provide our large student athlete population access to a better training facility.

We believe the plan that will be implemented by the athletic administration affords not only our student athletes with a better situation, but the rest of our student population as well. The plan is to completely refurbish weight room 2 in Boyden and have that facility available to all students seven days per week.

Additionally, there will be a new weight room in Totman, and the existing facility in Curry Hicks will be upgraded. We believe this will increase access to better strength training facilities for all. Three sites will be available to all students seven days per week. They will be better equipped and maintained than anything available right now.

Our proposal for the strength and conditioning facilities on this campus has been carefully thought out, with input from all the constituencies it serves. We believe strongly that this plan affords the best use of the space with which we are given access to, and will in the end give everyone a better place to work out!

'Smart' testing fails

To the Genius [Collegian, May 10]:

I am going to assume from reading your letter that you are no genius. I consider myself to be a "smart kid" yet I scored just above 800 on the SAT. Fortunately, I was able to take an overpriced prep course. This course increased my capacity to take the SAT by teaching me "tricks" of the test; it did not increase my intelligence level. Because I was able to shell out $500 I got a more acceptable score on a meaningless test.

It is a proven fact that the SAT is a culturally and racially biased test. Just like other forms of racism, people are too willing to blame the victim. Using the SAT to measure someone's intelligence is completely absurd. When looking at high school education in this country there is a serious lack of equity. There seems to be a correlation between socio-economic status and SAT scores.

Your ideas lead to increased oppression of minorities, with no specific standard test geared toward them. I'm sure that if Edgar Padilla or Tyrone Weeks saw your letter they would be offended by your ignorant assumptions.

UPC works to ensure safety at Spring Concert

In response to coverage by the Collegian and Channel 40 News of the accident during the Spring Concert on Sunday in which Chris O'Neil of R'ode Island fell from a walkway on Morrill Center, a few points must be clarified.

The accident took place out of the concert venue. Within the enclosed, secured pond area, a crowd of 8,000 to 10,000 people enjoyed an accident-free show due in large part to high levels of security. There were 100 student security workers (some of whom slept at the stage for the weekend to ensure safety) and an ambulance, six EMTs, 10 public safety officers, 15 uniformed and five plain-clothed officers. This high integrity of production by University Productions and Concerts is the result of three months of planning in coordination with Student Activities, Public Safety, the Fine Arts Center, Environmental Health and Safety, the Amherst Police Department and Mountain Staging.

UPC's experience has always been a progressive one. It has brought together its 12-year experience in producing Spring Concerts to coordinate a high security oriented day. UPC took the initiative to install additional fencing and security along the pond side of the lawn as well as to place safety and regulatory signs around the pond and lawn area.

UPC took all available precautions to avoid accidents within the venue, and none took place. If an accident occurs within Worcester Centrum, that is one issue. However, no one could blame the managers of the Centrum for an accident that occurred outside its venue to a person that was listening on the street to the concert inside. This is the same case. And while University police routinely patrolled the area around the concert, cases involving a lack of individual responsibility cannot be checked all the time.

UPC's mission has been to put on safe events and provide the community with quality recreational activities. UPC is students working for students. It would be unfortunate and short-sighted to think Spring Concerts should be ended because of accidents that occur outside the venue by individuals perhaps not maintaining their own safety. We would have hoped that the Collegian, a student newspaper, would have investigated and disclosed the above facts.

Arts staff '93: some of our favorite things

Compiled by JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

As the eclectic spring semester draws to a close at the Collegian and since I'm saying sayonara to being an eclectic editor, I thought it would be interesting to round up the very eclectic staff of the Arts and Living page and find out everyone's favorites in the eclectic field of entertainment.

Do you really care? Probably not, but hey, it's the last day of the paper so get over it. As an eclectic staff, we immerse ourselves daily in the eclectic field of arts, so I suppose we know what we're talking about it, but don't count on it.

JON LUPO — Arts Editor, snobby film critic, Kenneth Branagh wanna-be. MOVIE: Dangerous Liaisons, Dead Again, North by Northwest, Cinema Paradiso and Rebel Without A Cause. TV SHOW: "Seinfeld," "The Simpsons," "Homefront" and "Siskel & Ebert." BOOK: The Lost Language of Cranes by David Leavitt, A Separate Peace by John Knowles. GUILTY PLEASURE: Madonna's I'm Breathless, fast forwarding through the Muppet movies looking for homoerotic undercurrents, playing with my Crying Game action figures in my mother's bra.

LISA CURTIS — Arts Editor, Marion Ross groupie, natural blond No.1, snazzy dresser. MOVIE: Out of Africa. TV SHOW: "Saturday Night Live." BOOK: The Stand by Stephen King. GUILTY PLEASURE: making up fake Marion Ross interviews and passing them off as legit.

ADAM GOULSTON — Arts Associate, music critic, natural blond No.2, cool shoes. MOVIE: Mo' Better Blues, Harry and Tonto, The Graduate, Monty Python & the Holy Grail and Rebel Without a Cause. TV SHOW: "Seinfeld," "Monty Python's Flying Circus," "Northern Exposure" and "Get a Life." DISC: My Bloody Valentine, Loveless; Miles Davis, Kind of Blue; Allman Brothers, Live at Fillmore East. BOOK: Letters to a Young Poet by Rainer Maria Rilke. I Went to College and it was OK by Jim. GUILTY PLEASURE: Nude hiking, nice pupas, malt liquor.

CALEB COCHRAN — Arts Associate, music critic, calendar stud. MOVIE: Big, When Harry Met Sally, Dead Poets Society, Back to the Future, Unforgiven. TV SHOW: "Seinfeld," "Late Night," "The Nike John Calipari Show." BOOK: Catcher in the Rye by J.D. Salinger, The Essential Calvin & Hobbes by Bill Watterson, Lord of the Flies by William Golding. GUILTY PLEASURE: chocolate chip cookies, DP Dough.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
British actor/director Kenneth Branagh starred in one of Jon Lupo's favorite movies, "Dead Again."

CUTTER GARCIA — Writer, 90210 Columnist, embittered short guy. MOVIE: The Philadelphia Story, L.A. Story, Big, Brian's Song; New Wave Hookers. TV SHOW: "Quantum Leap," "Family Ties," "90210," "Bionic Man." BOOK: Illusions by Richard Bach, The Stand by Stephen King, Watchers by Dean R. Koontz. GUILTY PLEASURE: Trying to find new and unique ways to harass the police and my friends through 'Cutter's World.'

ADAM SCOTT ROBERTS — The like, totally way cool Campus Man, frat boy wanna-be, writer. MOVIE: Pretty Woman, Basic Instinct, Blue Steel, Cape Fear. TV SHOW: "90210," "Melrose Place." DISC: Madonna, You Can Dance. COLONGE: Joop! BOOK: The Firm by John Grisham. GUILTY PLEASURE: Buying munchies at CVS, calling up Madonna and Tori Spelling and then hanging up when they answer.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Accent queen Meryl Streep starred in one of Lisa Curtis' favorite flicks, "Out of Africa."

SHAWN McDONNELL — Theatre critic, UMass Theatre Guild's favorite person. MOVIES: *Brazil, M*A*S*H, Equus, Prelude to a Kiss.* TV SHOW: "M*A*S*H," "The Prisoner," "Quantum Leap." BOOK: The Satanic Verses by Salman Rushdie. GUILTY PLEASURE: jeering Jake Leno, watching FOX.

MARTY BROWN — Video Pick of the Week guru, crazed fan of Roger Ebert ("If I can't have you, nobody will!"). MOVIE: Blade Runner, Excalibur, Miller's Crossing, The Accidental Tourist, Reservoir Dogs. TV SHOW: "Siskel & Ebert," "Late Night," "Northern Exposure." BOOK: The Watchmen, V for Vendetta by Alan Moore and Dave Gibbons, The Dark Night Returns by Frank Miller. GUILTY PLEASURE: Spouting quotes from movies I've seen too many times.

ED HUMPHRIES — HSCN CEO VIP, Jon Lupo's heir apparent. MOVIE: Boyz 'N the Hood, Terminator 2, Of Mice and Men (1991 version) TV SHOW: "The Simpsons," "Cheers," "All in the Family," "Twin Peaks" (first season). GUILTY PLEASURE: doing one-armed push-ups with my pal Jack Palance, hanging with Ernest and getting scared real stupid.

KEN MAIRUI — Listen to This! music critic. MOVIE: Slacker, Taxi Driver, Manchurian Candidate, Barton Fink. TV SHOW: old reruns of "Saturday Night Live," "WKRP," "Kids in the Hall." BOOK: My Cousin, My Gastroenterologist by Mark

Reflections of Siena leads Emily to examine UMass roots

This time of the semester always proves to be one of the most stressful. Not only is the sun out, practically calling me to come and play, but somehow my workload actually gets heavier, not to mention the scheduling and housing stuff that needs to be done for next fall. The fact that I am in Siena, Italy has not changed any of this.

The weather has been absolutely gorgeous and summer-like for the past month, and the city's piazza fills with students as soon as classes are let out. Although these noble academics saunter into the sun filled piazza with the best of intentions to study, it is definitely difficult to absorb anything besides sleepy rays in the midst of all the chatter, music, laughter and impressive people-watching opportunities.

Despite the fact that the entire city is completely stricken with spring-fever, my professors seem in denial, assigning the first few weeks of school. Some things are universal.

It also seems that no matter how far away I go, Housing Services and that evil pre-registration process follow. Not wanting to waste next semester's tuition money on overseas telephone battles with Housing, I am sometimes stricken with the fear of living in a lounge or, worse yet, anywhere in close proximity to any given E lot.

Pre-registration is, at best, a fly-by-the-seat-of-your-pants operation from here, a scramble to schedule somewhat interesting and useful courses with the use of limited resources.

The real problem that I am experiencing now is coping with the fact that I am leaving this incredible place that has become home in a matter of weeks. I cannot comprehend now quickly my time here has passed. It seems like just yesterday that I arrived in Italy, ridiculously heavy baggage in hand (and strewn about the frozen cobblestone street), completely lost expression fixed on my face. I remember the uncontainable excitement that charged every nerve of my body, driving me to believe in myself enough to know that I could communicate, take care of myself and survive here.

Emily
MARINO

Today, looking back on my experience in Siena, I realize that I have succeeded. I plunged into a culture in which everything from the language to the way people view the world is diverse. I learned the language well enough to feed, clothe, entertain and keep myself not only well, but happy and surrounded by people and things that I will remember for a long time to come.

I kept my eyes and mind open, observing what it means to be Italian, learning that the notable differences between my culture and that of the Italians do not cancel the common traits we share as human beings.

Italy is filled with individuals who act, dress, eat, interact and speak differently that we do. But after many conversations with some of these same people I have come to realize that we all aspire to more or less the same things.

Some of us want careers, some look forward to having a family or to make a lot of money. Most of us eventually want to make a lot of money. Most of us even..ually want to fall in love, to see other parts of world, to understand ourselves and the people who surround us. We want to achieve goals that we feel will result in self-fulfillment and of course, happiness.

In the countless art, frescos, paintings, sculptures and architectural masterpieces at which I have gazed in awe I see that same yearning for spiritual fulfillment expressed by people thousands of years ago. The fact that these works are able to move me and my contemporaries so many years later speaks loudly for our band as humans, and our common labor in life to keep doing, searching and striving for that precious enlightenment and happiness.

I don't think I realized just how much I would learn about myself and about human nature before I came to Italy. I came here with a curious desire to know more about a culture that I had always felt somehow connected to, and after almost five months of absorbing, processing and recording the things around me, I understand why studying abroad is so essential.

In the struggle to accept and understand the differences in how we live, one is forced to take a sidelong glance at his/her own lifestyle and assess, appreciate and modify his/her role in that culture.

I encourage anyone who is even slightly interested in studying abroad to do so. The best way to get a broader perspective on just about everything is to take it all away and start over in a totally foreign environment.

The fantastic thing about "your state university" is that it offers each of you the opportunity and resources to take a magic carpet ride to anywhere in the world you desire to go and learn about.

And as my roommate, Arielle will attest to studying abroad will probably make you realize just how much you love the old campus. By leaving that music-blaring, student-laden, huge land of academic wonder and iffy diining commons food, we have both admitted that not only does Basics make a killer hummus, but that parts of us never left UMass.

It is realizations like this that we will retain and use to make the most of our remaining time as undergrads, and to remember that with a little know-how, some hard work, and a lot of guts, the world is literally at our fingertips, and, that anything is possible.

Emily Marino is saying ciao to Siena and returning to the Happy Valley next semester and is also a Collegian columnist.

Quick flicks

A couple quickie movie reviews: Try to catch Dave, a spirited, funny, clever, feel-good movie that won't leave a bad taste in your mouth. Kevin Kline shines as a ordinary guy recruited to stand in for the president. But when the big guy has a stroke in the arms of his mistress, Kline steps in for real. Sigourney Weaver and Ben Kingsley co-star, though one wishes they had more to do. Easily the best comedy of 1993 and that includes Groundhog's Day. Dragon is a comic book bio-flick of Bruce Lee that owes more to Dick Tracy than Malcom X. Jason Scott Lee does a good job as the karate/movie-star wonder, though the film never really pins down who Bruce Lee was, at least beyond the myth. Entertaining, but they could've done more. Dave: B+ Dragon: B-

Landolphi was trained to be an AIDS educator for high school students. She gave her first lecture in front of 2,000 students in Boston and said she could not deliver the information in lecture form.

"When it came time to talk about the ways of transmission, I couldn't keep a straight face," Landolphi said.

She said she preferred to use a mixture of comedy and honesty. Landolphi brought that combination to two free shows at a boyfriend's college. When she was brought back a third time, she said there were at least 750 students present.

Landolphi said she celebrates all genders, sexual orientations and races. She said she wants women to be sexually proud and confident.

"Ninety-nine percent of all positions of intercourse do not bring most women to orgasm — that's not great sex to me," Landolphi said.

She said everyone is in charge of their orgasm and she plans to use jokes, role-playing and acrobats, "the A to Z" of sexual knowledge.

"I don't need to put men down. . . we'll have better sex when everyone is sexually proud," Landolphi said.

Landolphi is a native of Beverly, Mass. and currently lives in Gloucester. She graduated with a bachelor's degree in theater from Middlebury College in Middlebury, Vt.

When she was originally approached by cable stations to do her program for television, Landolphi said she wanted to perform at UMass because she is from Massachusetts.

"One of the best things about UMass is the diversity, but that's not to say people appreciate that diversity," Landolphi said.

She currently hosts a weekly teen television program called "Raparound" on WBZ in Boston and performs 25 shows a month and has been to 400 universities. Landolphi has been nominated by the National Association for Campus Activities for "Lecturer of the Year" and for the Harry Chapin Humanitarian Award.

Landolphi will be giving two free shows at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday night. Tickets can be picked up in advance at the Fine Arts Center box office.

Sen. John Warner, the second ranking Republican on the panel predicted that approach in effect now under Clinton's interim order will be where Congress ends up on the issue.

Bowing to pressure, Clinton set the interim policy in January. But he also directed Defense Secretary Les Aspin to draw up an executive order by July 15 ending the ban.

Retired Gen. Schwarzkopf, the commander of U.S. troops in the Persian Gulf War, said he could accept that but not the idea of homosexuals serving openly in the military.

"I have no objection to leaving the situation exactly where it is now," he said.

Schwarzkopf, America's war hero, said his opposition to lifting the ban stems from the impact it would have on the military and its ability to fight.

"In every case that I'm familiar with and there are many when it became known in a unit that someone was openly homosexual, polarization occurred, violence sometimes followed, morale broke down and unit effectiveness suffered," Schwarkopf said.

If Clinton goes ahead with ending the ban, Schwarzkopf said the military will follow but there will be little enthusiasm.

"To me, they will be just like many if the Iraqi troops who sat in the deserts of Kuwait, forced to execute orders they didn't believe in," he said.

Residence Hall Contract Signing Information

Important, Please Read Carefully

The University requires all students living in the residence halls for the Fall 1993 semester to sign a 1993-1994 Residence Hall Contract Card. Any student wishing to live in the residence halls for next fall should be aware of the following:

- Residence Hall Contracts and Contract Cards were mailed to you in your residence hall on or about April 20, 1993.
- Contract Cards must be completed, signed and returned to the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore, by no later than Friday, May 21, 1993.
- Assignment for students failing to return a signed Contract Card by May 21, 1993 will be subject to cancellation.
- Students returning Contract Cards in person will receive a "Contract Receipt". Students who return Contract Cards by U.S. Mail must use certified Mail Return Requested. Returning a Contract Card by either of these methods will ensure a receipt for your records. It is for this reason that we strongly advise against using Campus Mail

If you still have questions about Contract signing procedures, call or stop by the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore (545-2100). Thank you, and have a great summer.

Leaving school has never been so easy.

It's not surprising that so many students move with Ryder. We've got sturdy, dependable trucks in all sizes; all with power steering, air conditioning, and AM/FM stereo - MOST are automatic. Plus, Ryder can help out with boxes, hand trucks, even moving tips.

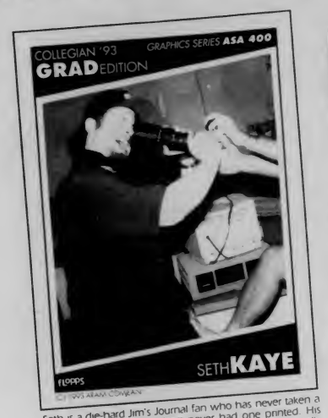
COLLEGIAN '93 TRADING CARDS

GRAD EDITION

COLLECT THEM ALL!



Seth is a die-hard Jim's Journal fan who has never taken a picture of a duck, or at least never had one printed. His Pulitzer for photojournalism sits beside an anatomically incorrect statue of SubGenius guru J.R. "BOB" Dobbs, a constant reminder of Collegians past. Surviving Southwest, blue hair and politically correct protestors (action figures available at a store near you), Seth maintains his dedication to photographing Whitmore administrators and politicians in all their foolishness.

"J" moved up from covering gymnastics and mirth in the halls of Orchard Hill (to the tune of "I Can't Explain" as covered by the Scorpions) to become News Editor and mirth at Mike's Westview with other Collegianites. The Collegian will miss Jason's connections with "high ranking officials at the rumor mill."

Andrea, returning from a semester of study abroad, spent this semester as photo tech on the Tuesday night "all women" staff. Along with a great personality, Andrea possesses a really funky watch.

Tami once overheard Collegian staffers talking about the paper on the bus back from Northampton as a new student. Despite what she heard, she joined in her junior year and soon graced the basement with her "style" – The Collegian Guide to Style, that is. Movie rights will soon make her wealthy beyond her wildest dreams and she can then retire to New Bedford, Ma.

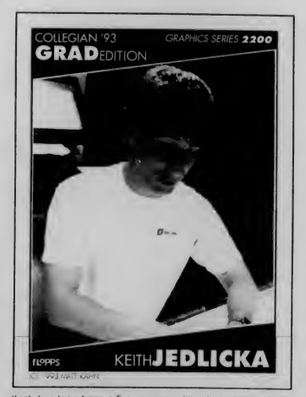
"Wrappin'" Reynolds became photo editor by a happy accident since then, Josh has doubled on Notes from the Campus Center Basement with Marc Elliott and taken cool pictures of Metallica in concert. His batting average has also improved significantly since last season.

Probably not the most popular student among Whitmore residents, Marc and his Notes from the Campus Center Basement took cheap shots at just about every UMass employee he could find making $60,000 a year and over for the last two years. The air in the office won't be as heavy without his constant stream of sarcasm. (Maybe we could even get rid of the dehumidifier.)

Greg isn't really a Republican, probably because there isn't a political party system on his home planet. Zuke was always able to make staffers laugh, mainly at him, throughout the Collegian newsroom. What will the SPORTS staff do for the lacrosse beat next Spring?

Pat has received high praise for his theory that the dinosaurs are not extinct, but that they have reached a higher state of spirituality and, as a result, have become invisible. A "true Morrisson warrior," Pat is active in the fight against the evil Anti-Jim. He is also in close contact with the A-Team. This is not a joke.

Alyssa escaped from a lifetime of lab work, pocket protectors and AUTOCAD to pursue her real love in life. But drag racing old 70s cars proved to be a hard field to break into. So, Alyssa did what many wayward upperclassmen do – she joined the Collegian. We're lucky she did.



Keith has long been a fixture in graphics department of the Collegian. In the past year one could find him in front of the Macs, singing along with Gene Simmons and Paul Stanley of KISS. Blake "Mr. Mai Tai" Phillips will have to find a new lunch mate.

Rivera will be sorely missed at the Collegian. Our outgoing Editor in Chief (shown here with four-legged friend) – a true renaissance man – tennis coach, writer, columnist and guardian against that dreaded disease, flim-flam. Furthermore, it has become clear to us that the man knows everyone.

Nicole's Collegian career lasted about the length of a president's term in office. It's fitting since she's as caring as Carter, tough as Reagan and agile as Ford. We'll really miss her after we forget about that nasty hot-air balloon incident. We still can't get the stains out of our clothes.

Text, they say, is the filler they put around ads in newspapers. If this is true, then Brett has had the most important job at the Collegian – designing advertisements. She has also appeared in in-house ads – a real privilege.

We don't always know about Chris, but the "Shadow" certainly knows. Toons, Chris has also written and designed weekend covers. Career leads? Hey, if Apartment 3-G can still make it as a daily strip in the Union-News, Chris will clean up. He graduates, with his friends Joe and Flesh as well as their curious cat.

Simon's Rock gunman to use insanity defense

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

PITTSFIELD — Lawyers for Wayne Lo, who is accused in a fatal shooting spree at Simon's Rock College of Bard, said Tuesday they are preparing an insanity defense.

"Such a defense could shift the burden of proving criminal responsibility beyond a reasonable doubt," said David Capeless, an assistant district attorney prosecuting the case.

However, District Attorney Gerard Downey said he was confident.

"We have from the very beginning believed we would be able to successfully prosecute. We still believe that," he said.

Lo, 18, of Billings, Mont., is accused of killing a professor and student and wounding four others during a shooting spree Dec. 14, 1992, with a semiautomatic assault rifle.

He has pleaded innocent in Berkshire Superior Court to a 17 count indictment for murder and other charges. Lo bought the SKS rifle at a local gun shop the day of the shootings. He is believed to have bought the ammunition by mail.

In an insanity defense, lawyers for the accused contend either that their client could not tell right from wrong, or lost control so that he could not conform to the law.

A lawyer for Lo, Janet Kenton Walker, declined all comment after she notified prosecutors of the insanity defense during a 45 minute private conference at Berkshire Superior Court.

But Downey said such a defense does not necessarily require prosecutors to prove a motive in the crime.

UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT • SUNDAY, MAY 23, 1993 • 10:30 AM
McGUIRK ALUMNI STADIUM
INFORMATION AND INSTRUCTIONS

Congratulations to the Class of 1993. The following information and instructions will assist you and your guests in preparing for the Commencement ceremony. It was prepared by Student Affairs Special Services in cooperation with "The Massachusetts Daily Collegian".

There is no rehearsal before the ceremony so please carefully note this information so that the Processional will proceed on time and in an orderly fashion.

In the event of rain, the ceremony will still take place but a shortened program will be followed, with a running time of approximately one hour.

Commencement Day

1. ARRIVAL TIME: Please be at the Main Entrance gates of the Stadium (the side opposite the Press Box) not later than 9:30 am (carrying your cap and gown).
2. SECTION LOCATIONS: Go through the gates. You will see two large signs listing the schools and colleges. If you are in Arts and Sciences, turn left: all others, turn right.
3. GATE ASSIGNMENTS: Go to the left/south end of the field (Arts and Sciences) or the right/north end (all others). At each end are two entrance gates. Look for the signs indicating at which gate you are to assemble. This will all become clearer on arrival!
4. MARSHALS (wearing academic robes and red sashes) will assist you at this point in lining up for the Processional. You will then robe.
5. PROCESSIONAL: The Processional for students will begin at approximately 10:13 am.

General Information

1. CAPS, GOWNS, TASSELS, AND ANNOUNCEMENTS should be picked up at the Textbook Annex not later than May 21 (between 9:00 am and 4:00 pm). On the day of Commencement, regalia may be obtained at the northeast side of the Stadium after 8:30 am.
2. SHUTTLE BUSES will provide free transportation to and from the Stadium for you and your guests. Buses will operate clockwise around campus approximately every five minutes. If you will be attending a post-Commencement academic reception, it is suggested that your guests park in the lot nearest that location.
3. TICKETS/INVITATIONS are not required for admission to the Stadium.
4. ALCOHOL will not be permitted in the Stadium.
5. TRAVEL ASSISTANCE (route maps to campus and parking information) will be available at Massachusetts Turnpike toll booths on the day of Commencement and beforehand at the Robsham Memorial Center for Visitors.

Because several other Amherst area Commencements are taking place on May 23, guests should be advised to allow sufficient travel time.

To assist with traffic flow, Amherst radio stations WTTT (1430 AM) or WRNX (100.9 FM) will be broadcasting traffic advisories.

6. ALTERNATE ROUTES from the Massachusetts Turnpike other than Exit 8 (Palmer):

- Exit 7 (Ludlow): Route 21 north to U.S. 202 north to Route 9 west
- Exit 5 (Chicopee): Route 33 north to Route 116 north
- Exit 4 (W. Springfield): I-91 north to exit 19 to Route 9 east

7. DIPLOMAS will be mailed after grades have been received, recorded, and processed by the Registrar's Office, and the diplomas have been engrossed.
8. INDEX orders should be placed with that office (304 Student Union) not later than May 31. Call 545-0848 for further information.
9. VIDEOTAPES of the entire Commencement ceremony will be available for purchase ($30) through the Union Video Center, 216 Student Union. Any profit generated will be put back into the University system. For additional information, call 545-1283.
10. For additional Commencement-related information:

Rent One Now, Pay For It During The Summer

You've probably seen one already, sleek, streamlined, matching top to bottom. You've probably used someones already, and maybe made floormates shut their doors when they see you and your popcorn coming. You may have wished you had rented one before the supply dwindled away to nothing. NOW YOU CAN HAVE ONE FOR YOUR VERY OWN.

In an effort to meet the needs of our residents who would like to rent a Microfridge but can't afford it right now, Housing Services will allow you to rent a Microfridge - and ask you to pay for it, NOT NOW, but during THE SUMMER.

If you would like to take advantage of this offer, stop by the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore and sign a contract.

P.S. I would hurry. Remember, it's first come, first served.

their time here," Whitcomb said. "They have a high tolerance levels, from six to nine beers, which compares to the tolerance levels of guys. They report blackouts.

Whitcomb said female students cite several reasons for their increased alcohol consumption in college, which parallel those cited by men. These include a need to fit in with one's peers, the perceived sophistication of drinking, boredom and a way to let go of inhibitions.

But some women cite additional reasons for their drinking, such as the desire to find a relationship and a competitive need to keep up with their male friends.

"Many students go to parties looking for 'Mr. or Miss Right,' but it's hard to get to know someone when they are drinking heavily three or four nights a week," Whitcomb said. "Many women say that if they don't drink, they are afraid men won't approach them."

Deborah, a graduate student, cited boredom as one reason that students drink every weekend and that students consider drinking a reward for working hard all week as another.

"I always held a beer at a party even though I don't drink. I figured if I'd paid to get in, and I didn't want to look dumb," Deborah said. "If I knew the people, I'd ask for a soda. I was respected for not drinking, but then again, my friends were nice people."

Other women recall feelings of isolation or shame because they did not drink much.

"When I lived in the dorms, my social life was nightmare because I didn't drink. I couldn't find a niche of friends. I felt lonely and ostracized," Gail, a junior English major, said. "I think if someone's dad or sister were drinking three nights a week, for hours at a time, you'd say they have a major problem. But most of my friends drink that heavily and excuse themselves because they are in college."

Franklin, a senior English major, said alcohol factors into what women he finds attractive.

"We like women who party. Alcohol doesn't factor what women I find desirable, but my relationships have centered around alcohol," Franklin said. "Every girlfriend I've had drank the same amount, if not more, than me."

By senior year, Whitcomb said most women report a decrease in the amount of alcohol and time they spend drinking, citing maturity as the reason for this change.

However, Whitcomb said she is concerned that these dangerous drinking habits continue with some students long after graduation.

"This behavior can carry into later life," Whitcomb said. "Most students will outgrow it, but it's a dangerous habit to have, especially for people for whom alcoholism is a family problem."

But for most students, the urge to drink heavily every weekend slackens once they reach their senior year in college and decreases even more significantly once they leave the university environment.

"I very rarely drink now," Caroline said. "It helps a lot that I have graduated and am out of the dorms, out of that drinking environment."

For Julie, cutting down on her drinking was not a conscious choice.

"By senior year, I was sick and tired of it. I was forced to slow down my drinking because my body couldn't keep up with the alcohol anymore," Julie said. "I spent four years at UMass and it was a pretty expensive party."

IMPORTANT RESIDENCE HALL INFORMATION

It is important for all residence planning to live on-campus for the fall 1993 semester to remember the following important procedures. Please read this information carefully and be sure you understand and are aware of each of the following obligations. Thank you.

1. RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT CARDS ARE DUE FRIDAY MAY 21. As always if you intend to live in the residence halls in the fall, you must return your Residence Hall Card to the Housing Assignment Office before you leave campus for the summer. When you return your Contract Card you will be given a date stamped receipt. Make certain you retain this receipt for your records. IF YOU FAIL TO RETURN YOUR RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT CARD BY MAY 21, 1993 YOUR FALL ASSIGNMENT WILL BE SUBJECT TO CANCELLATION.

2. JUNIOR/SENIOR ROOM CONFIRMATION CARDS ARE DUE FRIDAY, JUNE 18. Room Confirmation cards will be mailed to your permanent address during the first week in June if you signed up for a room and signed a Residence Hall Contract Card. These Confirmation Cards must be returned to the Housing Assignment Office no later than Friday, June 18, 1993. YOU MUST, FOR YOUR OWN PROTECTION, RETURN YOUR CARD CERTIFIED MAIL RETURN RECEIPT REQUESTED.

3. PAY YOUR FALL FEE BILL BY THE BURSAR'S AUGUST 6, 1993 DUE PAY DUE DATE. As always, financial obligations must be met by all residents who wish to retain their assignments for the upcoming semester. Fall semester fee bills will be mailed to your permanent address in early July. Failure to pay your bill by the due date of August 6th, will immediately cancel your assignment for the Fall. Call the Housing Assignment Office if you anticipate having difficulty paying your bill on time.

4. MAKE CERTAIN YOU REMAIN IN GOOD STANDING throughout the summer. If you are withdrawn for ANY reason after the last day of the semester, your residence hall assignment for the fall will be cancelled.

5. RESIDENCE HALLS CLOSE for the Spring semester on Friday, May 21 at 3:00 pm except for graduating Seniors. Make certain that you follow indicated "check out" procedures to avoid any unnecessary inconvenience or charges. HAVE A GREAT SUMMER!

Women's crew receives three golds at NECs

By ADAM RATTINER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts crew team won the overall point trophy at the Division II New England Championships last Saturday in Worcester. The women's varsity team won the overall point trophy with three gold medals.

The women's varsity lightweight boat of eight won the gold medal. A varsity lightweight rower, Sue Spencer, said, "We broke the course record by 35 seconds."

The women's varsity heavyweight won the gold medal. Kim Alhowik, a varsity heavyweight rower said, "We have been getting ready for the New Englands since September. Our coach, Greg Siemankowski trained us well."

The women's junior varsity boat won the gold medal. The J.V. coxswain Katie Burt said, "I think all the women's boats did really well but in terms of nationals we will have to do even better."

The men's heavyweight varsity boat recieved third place. Connecticut College beat them by seven tenths of a second and Coast Guard won by six seconds. Heavyweight rower Steve Duvell said, "We have definitely gotten much faster these past two weeks so we will do much better at the Nationals this weekend."

The men's lightweight varsity boat came in fourth behind Coast Guard, Williams, and Holy Cross. Lightweight rower, Jay West, said, "We have beaten all those teams before. We have had a few adjustments and picked up a lot of speed for the nationals this weekend."

The Men's junior varsity boat did well in their first heat but came in sixth place at the finals. Rower Bob Leahy said, "We beat Holy Cross who we had lost to earlier in the season in our first heat."

The women's novice first boat came in fifth place overall, and the women's novice second boat placed second.

The men's novice heavyweight boat missed making finals. Novice heavyweight rower Carlos Zalduando said, "It was very intense. We missed the finals by a second to Weslyan."

The men's novice lightweight boat got second overall. The University of New Hampshire won. Novice lightweight rower Sean Hurley said, "We are happy with our second place finish at the New England Championships but at the same time we know we can do better. If we row the way we know we are capable of, we won't have to settle for second place again."

The only boat that raced from UMass that was not an eight person boat was the men's novice lightweight basic four. Since there was no novice four category they raced in a varsity event. The received third overall. Bates College won and Conneticut College received second. Novice lightweight rower, Todd Wood said, "We had a bad start but we had an excellent sprint."

SPORTS NOTICE

The University of Massachusetts fencing team North Atlantic Section Fencing Results: Craig Andrew, 4th place sabre, Jennifer Ray, 6th place epee. The top 6 places head to nationals.

The sports staff will be having a meeting at 7 p.m. tonight at the Collegian. Those who want to write next year are advised to attend.

Crosschecks

The series moves to Long Island for game six tonight.

Norris Division

St. Louis and Toronto are tied 2-2. This series has become the Felix Potvin vs. Curtis Joseph show. Both goaltenders have played tremendously throughout this second round.

As the series moves to Toronto for game five, quite a bit of hatred has emerged between the two rivals. St. Louis has accused Toronto of running Joseph, while Toronto has denied everything.

Watch for Doug Gilmour or Brett Hull to step up and take over the series. Game five could decide who wins the series, and I promise it won't be pretty.

Smythe Division

Vancouver and Los Angeles are tied 2-2. Its been Shootout city out West. The winner in every game in this series has scored at least five goals.

Wayne Gretzky, who started the playoffs in a scoring drought, has been hot lately. If he can continue to play like the Great One of old, the Campbell Conference finals could come to Wayne's World.

Well, hockey fans, have a great summer, root against Pittsburgh and I'll see ya next year.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): For terrific success, think before you act. Submit original ideas to higher-ups to show them how eager you are. The future of a relationship is uncertain.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Early hours favor contract negotiations. Many hands not only lighten the workload but boost morale. Romance has you walking on air, you know somebody loves you. Smooth over any domestic differences.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Pleasant social activities could boost your business prospects. Do not confuse talking with communicating when you sit down with a friend to resolve a financial misunderstanding.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An opportunity to travel should be greeted with enthusiasm. You can make real headway with a creative project if you move swiftly. A confidential meeting proves advantageous.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not be shy about asking for help in righting a wrong. Telling the whole story will produce the best results. Creditors may be helpful if you inform them how things stand.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your state of mind is affected by events beyond your control. Hang in there and you will eventually find what you seek. Your productivity and income rise at the same time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day for negotiating. Iron out terms and contracts. You should be proud of your newly acquired position. You will succeed and make significant improvements to your organization.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21): Rally a work crew to tackle a tough task. Additional personnel may prove valuable. A friend, partner or mate agrees to your terms. Your involvement delights those who love you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Guard against hasty decisions at work. You and your colleagues' efforts, slow and steady, win the race. Loosen the purse strings to save a relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Juggling your career and domestic duties may make life hectic. Keep your emotions in check. Things up in the air will soon fall neatly into place. A windfall may come your way.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be alert for sudden upsets at home or work. Prize under pressure makes you a champion! Your colleagues are willing to cooperate. Be open-minded.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New information could be puzzling or distressing. Do not panic. Additional data will soon be available. Your participation in a special group impresses its other members.

JOB TO GRADUATE RATIO: 7.5 TO 1

The emerging career of physician assistant has 7.5 openings for every qualified graduate and is projected to be one of the top 15 careers of the next decade. Under the supervision of a physician, PA's perform many medical services that would otherwise be provided by doctors. These can range from taking histories to setting fractures. Starting salaries range from $35,000 to $40,000. For experienced PA's, salaries above $50,000 are becoming more common.

If you want to become a member of the next important career in medicine, look into the undergraduate Springfield College/Baystate Health Systems Physician Assistant Program. Applications now being taken for fall enrollment.

Lax faces No. 6 Hofstra for rematch

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Staff

The second season begins Saturday night for the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team. It will last as long as they continue to win.

The Gorillas (10-4, ranked eighth in the now-meaningless USILA poll) will face off against the Hofstra Flying Dutchmen Saturday night at Hofstra Stadium in Hempstead, N.Y. in the first round of the NCAA Division I lacrosse tournament. The winner faces Syracuse in the quarterfinals in Syracuse, N.Y.

UMass comes into Saturday's game with two big weeks under its belt. It gave Syracuse all the Orange could handle before falling 17-13. The team came up with an emotional 8-6 win over Brown for the New England Championship, a win that guaranteed an NCAA berth and fulfilled coach Ted Garber's promise to his father, former UMass coach Dick Garber, who has been hospitalized for about a month.

But Army rattled the Gorillas' cages with a 15-7 win Saturday, sending UMass on the road to the scene of its most disappointing loss of the season. Hofstra beat UMass 16-8 on April 3.

In that game, a fired-up, aggressive Hofstra team got eight goals from attacker Dave Donatello. Until that game, Donatello hadn't produced for the Dutchmen. But against UMass, the Ninja Turtle namesake came out of his shell and carved up the Gorilla defense like so many pizzas.

No facets of the UMass game plan seemed to work that day, largely because of a well-planned and executed Hofstra defensive scheme which slowed down (but didn't stop) All-American attacker Mark Millon and kept the Gorillas from getting off quality shots.

"You're not going to see [Donatello] score eight goals in a game on us again," Garber said. "We had been practicing indoors that whole week — we're a little different lacrosse team now than we were then."

Then, neither co-captains Millon or Jim Panetta were happy with the UMass performance. Both felt the team's upperclassmen had failed to lead by example, and that the Gorillas had looked past Hofstra, whom they had beaten 17-4 on the Hill in 1992, to the next day's game with nationally-ranked Duke.

"We told ourselves we weren't looking past Hofstra, but we didn't listen," a disappointed Millon said in the locker room after that game.

There will be no looking past Hofstra this time. That win over UMass propelled the Dutchmen to a Dutch treat of a season in which they defeated four tournament teams and played three others closely. They lost their last four games after skyrocketing to sixth in the USILA poll, but two of those losses came at the hands of Johns Hopkins and Princeton.

These two teams know each other well, through head-to-head competiton and the magic of videotape. Here, then, is the breakdown:

Attack: Both teams have a bevy of weapons to choose from. For Hofstra, the main weapons are Donatello, Andy Carlson and Dom DiNardo. But there are no stars on the Hofstra side which shine as brightly as UMass' Mark Millon. Fellow attackers Mike Valente and Wes Depp will prove important, as Hofstra will surely key in on Millon. But few if any have stopped Millon yet. A big day for the senior from Huntington, N.Y. could carry UMass into the next round.

Midfield: Kevin Jacobs, Kevin Barry and Kevin Moran highlight the Dutchman midfield. Here, UMass appears to have more depth in the persons of Bill Edell, Greg Kline and the "Fab Freshmen": Eric Triolo, Eric Bailey and Buddy Hoffman. But that depth will be counted on. Without it, Hofstra can key in on the UMass attack, as they did in the teams' last meeting.

Defense: Can the Hofstra D stop UMass again? Garber doesn't seem to think so. But Hofstra has proved they can play defense — they were one of four teams to hold the Gorillas under 10 and averaged eight goals allowed per game.

The Gorillas defense admitted they didn't play well against Hofstra. Their showing against Brown was Gorilla defense at its best. If the defense avoids a slow start, it should avoid a repeat performance of the first Hofstra game or the more recent loss to Army. Dennis Kelly and Chris Nentwich — who Garber holds is the best defensive midfielder in the nation — have been playing well and Jim Bernstine has turned in solid efforts consistently.

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

Senior midfielder Bill Edell and the rest of the Gorillas look to avenge an early season loss to Hofstra University this Saturday in the first round of the playoffs. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

Goal: Tom LoPresti and Rip Correnti have traded off as the "hot" goalie all season, with LoPresti emerging as a starter after the stunning comeback win at Yale. Either could start or come in if the other isn't having a good day. But a hunch says LoPresti, who started much of the UMass win streak, will get the nod.

For Hofstra, John Romeo has racked up a 64 percent save average. UMass did not shoot well against him in April. When UMass shoots well they eventually get to an opposing goalie. But to shoot well, UMass needs patience and discipline on offense.

Special teams: Kevin Moran gave Sam Joseph fits facing off in April. Moran is one of the best face-off men in the nation. But Joseph has proven he can step up to challenges, as he did against Duke and Brown. He will have to Saturday.

Gorillas on the air: Mike Fagerson will provide play-by-play on WMUA, 91.1 FM and WTTT 1500 AM, beginning at 7:15 p.m.

Chancellor Scott's parting shots

WHITMORE, 3rd Floor — Fear not my faithful, loyal and devoted reader(s), even with my new responsibilities as Chancellor, I will not abandon this space.

All along you thought this was just another boring sports column, but secretly with the cunning and creativity of a Calipari, I was lobbying for the position of chancellor.

I'll need a skybox at Mullins and McGuirk, a private jet (The UMass Express perhaps) in order to follow our teams and a BIG house with a full bar.

David
SCOTT

I'm happy to be a part of this team and I look forward to working with Coach Hooker. There's a great foundation here and I'm excited to be a part of it and can you believe the dough they're throwing at me?

• The Reggie Lewis thing has spiraled way out of control and now a doctor with the name of Mudge (part-time wrestler we presume) says Reg is okay to play. The first two garages I went to told me my truck needed a whole new engine, the next place I went, told me it was just the sparkplugs and the old Ford should be fine.

• Listen up David K. Scott, I was here first and I'm warning you right now that if some of the things that appear in this space are ever attributed to you, you're life will be miserable. I'm silly I tell ya so change your name, pal. Try Michael Morrissey, that's got a nice ring to it.

• Col. Klink has surfaced in Florida as a pitcher for the Marlins. He's using the first name Joe, but Schultz was spotted in the dugout, so we're convinced it's him.

• Wasn't Doc Rivers sitting behind a desk on CNN last year? Now he's adding composure to the Knicks. Ted Turner screwed up.

• What do you think all these overtime hockey games are doing for beer sales? Give the puckheads an excuse to have another round and the ramifications could be ugly.

• Our thanks to the Montague Inn for being a proud sponsor of this space all year long. Ed and Tina wish to thank you for your support and remind you that friends know when to say when. (Usually around last rack.)

I may not pass a class and my one remaining semester may have just become two, but thanks to Tina and the gang at the Inn I can hit the cross-side bank with more regularity and my positioning is coming along. That is truly what learning is all about.

• The Red Sox magic number is somewhere around 103. We are confident.

• Despite a losing record, the UMass baseball team was enjoyable to watch. Any inning could be a big one and with some youth on the squad, the future looks bright.

• Think Mark Millon and company want another shot at Syracuse? Is pizza mandatory after the bars?

• Hart Lee Dykes is out for the season and word around Foxborough is that my two-week old nephew will get the starting nod as wide receiver. "Jacob Scott Dennis on the completion from Drew Bledsoe." Talk about the youth movement.

• Hey, Oliver Miller, what do you think about wearing some Celtic green?

• Why is the UMass track named for the "People's Court" Doug Llewelyn? I was always a big Rusty fan.

• My dog Bo has been training for the Montague Dog Triathalon where he'll have to swim behind the Book Mill, run to the post office and bike over to the bakery. We've cut way back on his cheweys and the in-between snacks are nil. He's a lean, mean, barking machine.

Well, the Canadiens fed Buffalo a taste of their own medicine, sweeping Buffalo with the final three games ending in overtime. This was a tough loss for the Sabres, who battled hard without their two superstars. Both Alexander Mogilney and Pat LaFontaine went down with injuries in game three.

With the status of Mario Lemieux uncertain, and Patrick Roy finding his hot hand, Montreal is emerging as a possible Stanley Cup contender.

Pittsburgh Penguins lead the New York Islanders 3-2. Buoyed by the return of Mario Lemieux, the Penguins came to life, to win game five, 6-3. The series has been a dogfight thus far, but if Lemieux can remain healthy, the Penguins are the favorite to go all the way. If not, the race is still wide open.

The Islanders got a little good news of their own. Pierre Turgeon, the Isles' leading scorer may return from his separated shoulder earlier than expected and could play in game six.

David Scott chosen as new chancellor

ARAM COMJEAN / COLLEGIAN

Incoming Chancellor David Scott takes over his position as head of the state's flagship university July 1.

By CHRISTINA ROTHWELL
Collegian Staff

The Board of Trustees unanimously voted David K. Scott, 53, to be the next chancellor at the University of Massachusetts in early May. Scott will take office on July 1.

Scott served as provost at Michigan State University from 1986 to 1992. As part of receiving Michigan State's John A. Hannah Distinguished Professor of Learning, Science and Society Award, Scott was on sabbatical at Oxford University, where he examined European educational systems last year.

Scott and Claudia Mitchell-Kernan, the dean and vice chancellor of graduate programs at the University of California at Los Angeles, were the finalists for the chancellorship out of 70 applicants.

Although Chancellor Richard O'Brien said he only met Scott briefly, he said he feels Scott's qualifications look very respectable on paper.

"I think my first suggestion would be that he has an outstanding faculty to work with and a very lively group of students. He better get well acquainted with both," said O'Brien, who will be ending his two-year tenure as interim chancellor at the semester's end.

Scott's salary as chancellor, $150,000, will be 38 percent more than that of Joseph Duffey, the University's last permanent chancellor.

Scott visited the campus and attended four forums at the end of March. During a student forum held in the Cape Cod Lounge, Scott discussed how he would work for greater admissions of minority students.

At Michigan State, Scott said he helped to implement recruitment of freshmen according to the racial diversity of graduating high school students across the state. Scott also mentioned that he would want students to be oriented on diversity during their first year.

To encourage a more diverse faculty, Scott said he would offer scholarships to women and minorities, and exert pressure on departments to hire them.

Instead of raising tuition during a budget crisis, Scott said he would prefer to see an increase in state taxes to fund higher education.

When Richard D. O'Brien took office as interim chancellor two years ago in the midst of a $20 million budget shortfall, he said the University's faculty union proposed the "run out of gas approach."

"They believed we should make no accommodations and proceed until about February or March and watch the budget come to an end, then send the students home," O'Brien said. "It was a recipe for disaster. It wasn't fair for the students."

In the first month of his term, O'Brien said he was at the Statehouse in Boston every week, working with the legislature. Reproached by former University President E.K. Fretwell and the Board of Trustees for not handling matters centrally, O'Brien said he "dealt less and less with the legislature as the end of my term approached. I am most pleased about the fact that we have managed to

UMass officials seek tighter smoking rules

By ALYSSA M. OWENS
Collegian Staff

Smoking on the University of Massachusetts campus may soon face restrictions following negotiations between Chancellor Richard O'Brien and several constituent groups on campus.

"I must get the facts together and see if we can provide adequate smoking areas for people which will not be hazardous," O'Brien said.

"I would prefer to provide an opportunity for people to smoke if they could do it without passing it on to non-smokers."

– Chancellor Richard O'Brien

A policy proposed by O'Brien at the beginning of the Spring semester would allow smoking only in designated guest rooms at the Campus Center hotel and certain University-owned and leased individual rooms and apartments, including the residence halls in accordance with policy established by Housing Services.

The policy, if approved, would be the second policy aimed at discouraging smoking on campus.

Approximately five years ago a policy was established which prohibits the sale of tobacco products on campus.

The policy was a result of a push toward greater health consciousness by both students and university employees, said Miles Seaver, operations manager of the University Store.

Various constituent groups at the University have voted on O'Brien's policy throughout the spring semester.

The Faculty Senate voted Feb. 18; the policy was approved.

The Graduate Student Senate voted Feb. 23; the policy was not approved by a vote of 14-6.

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted April 21; the policy was approved by a vote of 32-12. Senate President David Nuñez opposed the policy, advocating the rights of smokers, while Student Trustee-elect Al Lizana favored the policy.

O'Brien said he must negotiate with the University Staff Association, which is a union for the University's classified employees, before a smoking policy can be passed.

"The U.S.A. Union members told me, 'If you want to stop smoking on the University campus, you've got to negotiate with us,'" said O'Brien, noting there is a clause in their contract which says members must be provided with a place to smoke.

O'Brien said he has conferred with Paul Page, vice chancellor of administration and finance, on establishing a way to provide smokers with an area which is entirely separated from non-smokers, instead of implementing the stricter policy he initially proposed.

"I would prefer to provide an opportunity for people to smoke if they could do it without passing it on to non-smokers," O'Brien said.

Many University students support stricter smoking regulations on campus.

"I think it's a super idea," said Savas Gunduz, a sophomore marketing major. "If you've got an enclosed smoking area, that's okay. But, if not, the smoke will be spread to non-smokers."

"I support it," said Michelle Mahoney, a 1993 graduate of the University. "It will help keep the campus clean. It will keep my lungs clean."

"It's only courteous not to smoke in public places," Mahoney said.

Even some students who smoke favor the policy.

"It would hurt, but it's a good move," said Srinivas Ravela, a graduate student in computer science, while puffing a cigarette in the Campus Center.

"In general it's nice to have a no smoking policy inside buildings," Ravela said.

Most on-campus facilities operated by Auxiliary Services will remain open and continue service this summer.

The University Store, which serves as the main Campus Center store, will be open from 8:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, and the Mini-Store in the Student Union will be open from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, said Miles Seaver, operations manager for the Campus Center store.

Seaver said the game room, located in the Student Union, will be open from 11 a.m.-4 p.m., Monday through Friday. The game room offers nine pool tables, as well as ping-pong, air hockey and a video game.

Just outside the Hatch in the Student Union, there are several video arcade games, which are accessible during Campus Center operating hours.

Hampden Snack Bar in Southwest will be open from 7 a.m.- 3 p.m. weekdays. Hampden Munchies will be closed for the summer. Franklin Munchies in the Central Residential Area will be open from 7:30 a.m. - 3:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Worcester Munchies, in Northeast, will be open from 8 a.m.- 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, said Seaver. The Munchies stores offer convienience-store type foods, as well as newspapers and magazines.

The Bluewall cafeteria will be open from 11:30 a.m.-1:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, and the Bluewall Coffee House will be open 11:30 a.m.-5 p.m., Monday through Friday, said Jean Russell of Campus Center food services.

The Campus Center Coffee Shop will be open seven days a week, from 7:30 a.m.-5:30 p.m., said Russell.

The Top of the Campus restaurant will be open for lunch Monday through Friday from 11:30 a.m.-1:30 p.m. The TOC Lounge will be closed for the summer, as will the Student jobs abound, both on, off campus

By FRANCIS ZERA
Collegian Staff

There are a multitude of options for the student seeking part-time employment both on and off campus through the Student Employment Office in 243 Whitmore.

"We offer jobs both on and off campus, work study and non-work study," said Judy Walker of the Student Employment Office.

The office provides an interested student with a listing of available jobs, listed by category. It is then up to the student to call the appropriate person to set up an interview. Walker stressed the role of the SEO as being primarily an information source. "We do not set up interviews," she said.

The jobs on campus are generally clerical work, driving, dining commons work, and similar types of work. Off-campus employment through the SEO is usually for a non-profit organization, doing such work as child care, errands and deliveries, or painting. The average pay scale for all categories is in the five to seven dollar-per-hour range, said Walker.

The current system, called JEMS, for Job Employment Matching Service, is being replaced this July with an updated jobs listing system, said Walker.

JEMS provided a listing of jobs for a student based upon their application, which was entered into the computer. A card was then mailed to the student with the requested job information. The new system will provide the student with an immediate listing of all available jobs in a requested category, saving the student time and the SEO money, said Walker.

Other sources for non-work-study employment include the Northampton Division of Employment Security's Job Matching Program.

"The D.E.S. has the most complete listings of statewide jobs anywhere, both full-time and part-time," said employment services manager Kirk Watley.

In addition to offering its free job matching services locally, one can find job opportunities in other areas of the state, which is particularly appealing to a student from another part of the state seeking employment back home, said Watley.

The Job Matching center exists to "screen applicants and employers," said Watley. An applicant can rest assured that a listed job is offered by a "legitimate employer," and the employer receives applications only from qualified applicants.

The Job Matching center offers workshops on resume writing and interviewing techniques, as well as providing a computer and laser printer to write and print a resume. "Workshops are free and one of the best things a person can do" towards improving their chances of employment.

One does not need be unemployed to use these services, said Watley. All one needs to do is go to the office located on 243 King Street and register for the program.

"We place a lot of people, and there are some good jobs," said Watley.

The University's Mather Career Center provides information and opportunities concerning co-ops and internships. The Center also provides workshops for resume writing skills and interviewing techniques, as well as setting up recruiting and interviewing schedules for employers.

EWC attempts to be 'welcoming'

Center offers information, counseling for all women

By LAURA V. SCHEEL
Collegian Correspondent

The old yellowing halls of Wilder Hall echo with the heaving of the heavy doors, the home of the Everywoman's Center.

Once inside, one is greeted with a large colored display of fund raising goals, like those found on church lawns or in school lobbies.

The fund-raising goal is indicated at the top of an illustrated thermometer, with a red column showing the current level of donations. The red line falls short of the goal by many thousands of dollars.

Largely an information service, the Center's physical size is small in relation to the amounts of resources and information it provides.

The walls are awash with bulletins such as "Oldies But Goodies Womyn's Dance," "Fight Back," "1993 Black Musician's Conference," "Religion And Homosexuality," along with many other notices.

"The environment is one of women helping women, one that is safe and comfortable. We really try to convey that in the Center," said Sharon Gavini, a work study student in the Resource and Referral Program.

The message pasted on the inside of each book in the Center's library reminds users of its cooperative foundation: "EWC's library operates on a very limited budget. We try to provide books for women, by or about women, that are useful or interesting. Many women depend on and use these books frequently... EWC is for all of us!"

Titles such as Parenting and Family, Environment and Nature, Gender Issues, Sports and Travel, Women and Aging, Disabled Women, Media and Arts, and Careers and Employment fill the shelves that contain over 2,000 volumes.

The use of the Center's library, as with all of the services they provide, is free. It is operated on the assumption of mutual understanding, interest and respect.

The decoration of the Center is a reflection of the goals of the center, which are to provide a "place that is welcoming to all. A woman of any background or sexual orientation can see similar images and people of her own self," said director Carol Wallace.

Begun in 1972 by a group of community women who wanted greater access to University services, the EWC was originally under the direction of the Department of Continuing Education.

The mostly volunteer staff were granted space in Munson Hall, and received funding for half-time positions only. The Center was later moved to Goodell, and then to its current site at Wilder Hall. This last move was intended as a temporary move.

That was over a decade ago, and the Center has been steadily lobbying for a larger space. Currently, the Center is divided into two locations, with the second site located at the distant Nelson House, on East Pleasant Street.

"We are terribly in need of more space and equipment, and as it is now, the center is completely inaccessible to disabled people," said Liz Rensenbrink of the Resource and Referral Program.

Now under the administration of Student Affairs, the center receives two-thirds of its funds from the University, relying on outside community grants and donations for the remainder.

In order to maintain its current level of services, the Everywoman's Center needs a minimum of $40,000 per year.

reviewing applicants for the chancellor position in late January. By mid-March the committee had narrowed the candidates to four; Luis Proenza, from the University of Alaska; Diether H. Haenicke, from Western Michigan University; Mitchell-Kernan; and Scott.

During the last two weeks of March, each of the chancellorship finalists, except Haenicke, who withdrew his candidacy on March 23 due to pressing problems on his campus, toured the campus and attended four open forums for two days.

At the end of each forum, the audience had the opportunity to fill out evaluation forms, which aided the committee in choosing a candidate. Although the Undergraduate Student Senate voted unanimously on April 7 to ask the committee to reopen its search, the committee forwarded the names of Mitchell-Kernan and Scott to University President Michael K. Hooker April 9.

"The deliberations and hard work that committee members contributed during the search speak highly of the campus as a whole. The final selections reflect the committee's assessment of the type of individual who will meet the needs of UMass Amherst in today's environment," said Rina K. Spence, chair of the committee.

Scott, who was born on the Orkney Islands located off the coast of northern Scotland, earned a bachelor's in physics in 1962 and a doctorate in physics in 1976 at Oxford University.

Acclaimed for his work on nuclear collision, Scott is an American Physical Society Fellow and has given lectures on this topic all over the world. Scott has written over 100 papers on nuclear collisions.

As a researcher at the University of California at Berkeley, Scott was the scientific director at the Cyclotron laboratory.

Peter H. Cressy, who is president of the Massachusetts Maritime Academy, was chosen to be the new chancellor at UMass-Dartmouth. Cressy was a rear admiral in the U.S. Navy.

"Both of these individuals are outstanding academic leaders and I am confident in their abilities to move their respective campuses into the 21st century with vision and dynamism," Hooker said.

weather some terrible budget years."

"Two years ago he assumed the helm of what would mainly be called a sinking ship and has steered it into more stable water — for that he has deserved some credit," said Student Trustee Kevin Newnan, who worked very closely with O'Brien and graduated in May. "I took office the day he took office and I will leave the day he will leave office."

O'Brien said he is proud the University has managed to replace more faculty each year. Every year 80 faculty members leave. Last year six faculty were replaced. This year's plan is to replace 23, and next year the University is seeking to replace 65, O'Brien said.

The relationship between student leaders and the administration has greatly improved in the last two years, O'Brien said. Campus student leaders, who O'Brien said he has worked with closely, have done a good job.

"I think down deep he meant well, but he didn't have enough skin for the job. You had to push him to the wall to have him do anything," said former student government President Jennifer Wood.

O'Brien has come far in dealing with students and their concerns, said student government President David Nuñez, who took office April 1.

"I think he is doing a good job right now. He is leaving with grace," Nuñez said. "I wish him the best."

O'Brien said the "nicest" thing that he has done for students is to invite Thomas Robinson to be vice chancellor for Student Affairs. O'Brien said Robinson has "revolutionized the attitudes as well as structures for student affairs."

O'Brien has been supportive of multiculturalism, and has come to appreciate members of the campus community, Robinson said.

"His commitment will have a long-lasting effect at this University," Robinson said.

In response to the Oct. 3, 1992 racial attack on Arlens Barosy, a resident assistant on the 17th floor of Washington Tower, students stormed Washington Tower on Oct. 9 looking for the assault's hosts.

O'Brien said he worked with minority students, negotiating the renaming of Columbus Day, and changing the physical arrangements of the four cultural centers and academic centers for minority students. Student negotiators and O'Brien found ways for minority students to get involved with hiring faculty and multicultural updates, O'Brien said.

But Nuñez said he would have liked to have seen some sort of public announcement of what happened.

Another significant event during O'Brien's tenure was the May 1, 1992 rally on the Student Union steps, protesting the verdict in the Rodney King beating trial, when about 250 students poured into the Collegian offices.

Over the course of the following week protestors made several demands including that the women's issues page be reinstated and a co-editor of color for the women's issues page be added. The editors moved the paper off campus temporarily and continued production from alternative locations.

Although he acknowledged the University got bad press, O'Brien blames the management of the Collegian for not responding to minority student's needs. O'Brien said he is glad he took a hands-off approach to the incident.

"To be frank about it, I am still not entirely sure what ought to have happened. I am very dismayed by the principle features of the event — the seizing of newspapers by one group, the breaking of a window, the general hubbub," O'Brien said. "That was all dismal stuff. And I do ask myself 'should I have intruded on this system?'"

"Should I have said, 'people this may be an RSO [Registered Student Organization], but nevertheless you will do x,y,z?' And I imagine by doing so, I could have avoided that mess. I still think it would have been the wrong thing to do. At the time I still felt, and I still do, that I was going to take a basically hands-off approach, unless there was danger to life or limb involved."

By playing the part as "an honest broker" the situation has resolved itself, O'Brien said.

"We now have an editor who is a minority, and I have excellent relations with him as I never did with the group that was involved at the time," O'Brien said.

At the same time as the Collegian takeover, about 350 students, from the Rodney King rally on the Student Union steps, stormed into Whitmore demanding 10 new faculty members of color, five women and five men. The protesters staged a nine hour sit-in.

Calling the take-over, "a large scale visitation," O'Brien said, the protestors "had a misunderstanding about the rate at which we were hiring minority faculty... We were already doing very well. In fact, in a single year we've hired 11 faculty members."

But Nuñez said O'Brien engaged in a tug of war with students, causing the situation to get worse.

"He had no clue in dealing with students," Nuñez said.

During his second year as chancellor, O'Brien said he encouraged the Special Opportunity Fund, which has brought 45 minority faculty to the campus.

When David K. Scott becomes the University's permanent chancellor on July 1, O'Brien said he is going on a full-year sabbatical leave.

"I have an opportunity to write, and think about what I want to do for a year. I am a tenured member of biochemistry and molecular biology, so one of my options is to come back and teach in that department," said O'Brien, who has been the provost and the executive vice chancellor during his nine-year stay at the University.

"But I think I might have another career in me. I have had one career as an experimental scientist, and then another career as a University administrator. I don't know. A part of me would like to explore something completely different, in the business or corporate world."

MY DEGREE GOT ME THE INTERVIEW.
ARMY ROTC GOT ME THE JOB.

Things got pretty competitive for this job. I'm sure my college degree and good grades kept me in the running. But in the end it was the leadership and management experience I got through Army ROTC that won them over.

Army ROTC taught me responsibility, self-discipline and leadership. Those are things you just can't learn from a textbook.

I don't know where I'd be right now if I hadn't enrolled in Army ROTC, but I do know one thing for sure... I wouldn't be here.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers or cartoonists and do not necessarily reflect those of the Collegian unless otherwise noted.

Mother knows best: UMass-Amherst converts a skeptic

The University of Colorado and UMass: those were the two institutions that accepted my application to the world of higher education. One of those was a "safety."

For some reason, I had a great aversion to even considering "the Zoo." Maybe it was because Amherst seemed dangerously close to my hometown of Hingham, or maybe it was because my mother, ever the bargain hunter, ended every praise-heaping speech about our fine state university with, "... and it's a hell of a good deal, too."

Whatever the reason, I was certain that any other school would surely be more of what I was looking for in a college experience.

Of course, I was fighting a losing battle. A propaganda campaign aimed at undermining my mother's opinion of UMass promptly backfired. She could produce three articles hailing UMass as "an affordable Harvard" for every one of my "UMass Freaks Burn Professors" pieces.

I felt the suction of the Amherst Vortex getting stronger and stronger. As September neared, my mother pried away at my grip on my invitation to Colorado until finally, the last corner was ripped off and I found myself hurtling down the Mass Pike, end over end, passing cars and several of my friends from Hingham, who were also being pulled in by the invisible force.

That first semester in an all-male dorm gave me plenty of stories to tell my mom. They were not nice stories. For some reason, though, instead of using them to my UMass-bashing advantage, I found myself defending UMass.

So why the change of heart, you might ask.

As I soon began to find out, UMass is a school with tremendous resources. Not necessarily financial resources, although they do seem to get money from somewhere when they need it, but natural, human and, particularly, resources that come from outside of campus confines.

Jeff
MCKENZIE

I cannot hope to give you an accurate picture of these resources by glancing over them all. Instead I will share a few experiences I have had in the course of my stay.

On a bright green spring morning, my mountain bike and I reached the summit of Mt. Toby in Sunderland on the Robert Frost Trail. There were no signs of my tracks or the snow I had tramped during the long winter when I had climbed up in order to float down on my snowboard.

A white-haired man with a walking stick appeared from the other opening of the trail on the summit. He stopped and we spoke for a while. He told me of how he swung from birches just like these when he was a boy, bending the slender trunks across the lines of the other darker trees. Then he ambled off in the direction from which I had come, a ghost-like figure of the man for which this trail was named.

Every Wednesday last semester, excepting holidays, my academic schedule took me from my management professor, a native of South Africa and a brilliant man who brought social concerns to the forefront of business thought, to my English professor, a colorful native of Down East Maine and an inspiring writer who brought my writing and my thinking to a higher level, and finally to my education professor, a native of hell — judging by how much he played devil's advocate — but an intensely critical thinker in the arts and a writer for "Sesame Street" to boot.

The last experience is not a single experience, but one that has lasted my entire stay here. It is the collective experience of five separate colleges in the area and the students who go to them. It is the culture and the resulting atmosphere when so many are brought together from so far apart for a common purpose: to learn and to develop and to improve. It is an experience which cannot be found elsewhere, and which sets this University apart.

So, as usual, my mother was right in, well, recommending the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. And as I like to remind her, especially when attempting to borrow money, it's a hell of a good deal, too.

Jeff McKenzie was a Collegian columnist and a member of the UMass Amherst class of 1993.

Reflections on area summer

Now that the semester is over, why am I still hanging out down here in the Collegian offices? It's 4:30 p.m. on Thursday, May 20th in the Year of our Lord nineteen-hundred and ninety three.

Is this the sign of a person who has no social life whatsoever, or am I simply too ambitious for my own good? Dedication can sometimes be fatal, you know — as the movie The Shining showed, "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

As the summer is bearing down upon us like a trailer truck on the Mass Pike, some questions arise as to the meaning of the collegiate existence.

Francis
ZERA

Now don't get me wrong, I actually live for the summer months. I mean, who can really say they get excited at the prospect of long underwear, snow, ice and slush and weeks of sub-freezing temperatures? But I guess I've got the end-of-the-semester blues.

Friends are going home, graduating, moving on. I actually have to start gainful employment next week, and the normally crowded Campus Center Concourse will be absolutely deserted soon. There is nothing more depressing than seeing the usually bustling campus completely devoid of human life, save for the occasional groundskeeper.

Studying for exams, writing papers and doing assignments can really be a chore, and the break from that will do me good. But having discovered the social aspects of college, this semester's end is the most difficult that I've encountered by far.

Now that I've vented, on to more positive things. Have you ever experienced the Happy Valley in the summertime? It can be postcard-perfect. The towns revert to their post-student patterns, slowing down considerably and becoming more sedate in manner. Stores close earlier, the days are longer, and people sit out on their front porches to watch the world go by, nice and slow.

Amherst without students is like Hyannis without tourists, although it can actually be more enjoyable. No crowds on the streets, miniscule lines in stores, and no lines at the bars.

The woodlands are at their arguable best, and there is where one finds the ultimate in solitude. There is no finer place to go to simply clear one's mind and to contemplate life, ideas, or to seek inspiration for anything than within a peaceful wood.

Completely bored, I ramble on. Led Zeppelin did a song called "Ramble On." I think it was on "Presence," but I'm not absolutely certain. Also appropriate to a walk in the woods, which is sometimes referred to a ramble. I added that to provide continuity to this. An idea must be presented, described, expounded upon, examples cited, conclusions drawn, and opinions given without losing the central topic. Is my topic melancholy, boredom or the benefits of spending time outside urbania? Don't ask me, because I don't know either.

This is not meant for any other reason other than to alleviate my boredom, so I don't have to be consistent, clear or unambiguous. So there. Put that in your pipe. Or anywhere else you think it would be appropriate. And I can make these paragraphs as long as I want to. Sue me.

In discussing the transgenderal interpersonal interrelations and in discussing the often unnecessary discourses that often occcur, one comes to the conclusion that all students are just horny and are only looking for a good time, not an education.

Francis Zera is a mind-numbingly bored Collegian staffer, with absolutely no social life whatsoever. Well, OK, he does have a fishtank.

Calling writers everywhere

Hullo there — hope you're enjoying your UMass training. We have just a few words to say about this here page, and the Collegian in general.

We like to think we're involved in an intimate relationship with each and every one of you, a passionate affair driven by the forces of love and hate. And lovers send letters. Lots of them. Especially mushy, sentimental ones. But we prefer to hear about what makes you sad, angry, confused, frustrated. We'll help you solve those problems. We're like group therapy, only with 19,000 members. And we don't cost $100 an hour.

Don't just sit around with a protest sign on the Student Union steps. Let us be your soapbox.

Whitmore welcomes you

Welcome to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst! Last summer, I, too, was new to the University, arriving from Pomona, California, where I had held a similar post at the California State Polytechnic University at Pomona. I have found this to be an exciting campus and am glad I chose to come here. As the person responsible for many of the student services on this campus — housing, health services, financial aid, academic support services, student activities, public safety — I want your experience here to be good and for you to feel that the decision to attend our university was a good one.

Thomas B.
ROBINSON

The main reason for attending college is to get the best education you can, one that will put you further on the road to becoming an active and creative citizen. Your classes will undoubtedly invigorate, inform and infuriate you at various times during your years here. You may choose to take courses at Smith, Mount Holyoke, Amherst and Hampshire Colleges through the Five College exchange program.

There are also many, many opportunities to extend and augment your formal education by participating in activities and programs outside the classroom setting. Students often find they are more successful in their academic work when they are involved in extracurricular activities. On this campus, there are co-op and internship programs, volunteer and community service programs, cultural events, the best marching band in New England, singing groups, a theater guild, intramural and club sports, an outstanding intercollegiate athletic program and an active student government. Over 175 registered student organizations include a daily newspaper, two radio stations, a cable television channel, the Black Student Union, an outing club, martial arts groups, a science fiction club, sports clubs and cultural, religious, political and public interest groups. We also have a wonderful Fine Arts Center, four cultural centers, three multicultural centers and the new, state-of-the-art Mullins Convocation Center.

Although this is a big and busy campus, we want it to be a welcoming place. Even more important than our programs are the people who study and work here. During the past year, we have been striving to improve the quality of life for everyone. Lots of people including many students, have worked to improve communication among offices, agencies, groups and individuals. You will be important to this ongoing effort! I want to hear from you about what is working and what isn't. Get involved, check out what we have to offer, and let me know what you think.

The New Students Program will be busy. Enjoy it and the rest of the summer. I look forward to September and to meeting many of you during the academic year.

Thomas B. Robinson is the vice chancellor for student affairs.

uhs University Health Services
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003

The University Health Services (UHS) is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week during the academic year and is located in the Central residence area for easy accessibility.

UHS is staffed by board certified physicians, licensed psychotherapists, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, and a variety of support staff. We are accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations (JCAHO) and Accreditation Association for Ambulatory Health Care (AAAHC).

Clinic Hours

General Clinics are open for appointments from 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. Monday thru Friday.

Urgent Care is open 24 hours/day, during the school year. We are closed from midnight to 8 a.m. from May 28 to August 16, 1993. There is a Triage/Advice nurse available by phone (549-2671) when the Health Services building is closed. There is a co-payment for visits after 9 p.m. during the week, after 12 noon on Saturdays and all day Sunday and Holidays.

Plan Definitions

Basic Health Plan (BHP) - Prepaid health plan that covers most services available at the on-campus University Health Services. Does not cover hospitalization on-campus or services off-campus. Paid for by a non-waivable mandatory fee required by the University for students taking 5 or more credits.

Supplemental Health Benefits Plan (SHBP) - A medical benefits plan, (including hospitalization, surgical and pharmacy benefits) which provides coverage not included in the Basic Health Plan. SHBP meets Massachusetts State Law requirements for a Qualified Student Health Insurance Plan. Waivable only with evidence of comparable health insurance coverage. Covers BHP Copays 100%.

Student Family Health Plan - Combined Basic and Supplemental Plans available for family members of the student enrolled in BHP and SHBP.

UHS Tips

Always call U.H.S. first: for routine appointment making; emergencies to receive advice; and before "Walking-in". Same day appointments are often available.

Choose a regular provider for continuity of health care, especially if you have an ongoing health problem.

Most services are prepaid but some procedures have additional co-payments.

Confidentiality of Records

All UHS records are confidential. No information will be released, either verbally or in writing, without your written permission. The restriction on information release applies to parents, friends, and University staff. Mental health records are kept separate from the general medical records and are also governed by this strict policy.

Health Questionnaires...Why?

Did you ever wonder why you had to fill out a Health Questionnaire? The most compelling reason is that the information you provide may save your life. For example, you may arrive here unconscious after an accident, unable to give us your medical history. In this situation, your questionnaire will be used by your physician to make decisions about treating you.

The second reason is that Massachusetts law requires ALL new students entering college to submit proof of the following immunizations, within 10 days of coming to campus:

TETANUS-DIPHTHERIA vaccine within the last 10 years
2 (TWO) DOSES OF MEASLES* after your first birthday
1 (ONE) Dose OF MUMPS after your first birthday
1 (ONE) DOSE OF RUBELLA after your first birthday

*Please note: due to outbreaks of measles on some campus within the last few years, Massachusetts law since 1991 has required proof of a second dose of a Measles vaccine for people born after January 1, 1957.

To complete your immunization requirements on the Health Questionnaire form, please contact your doctor, high school nurse, or attach photocopies of your immunization records to the form. If you have not received a Health Questionnaire form please contact the University Health Service Health Questionnaire office immediately, since failure to complete your immunization requirements does affect your standing at the University. If you have any questions please contact the Health Questionnaire office at (413) 549-2671 ext. 275.

Finally, you will be denied academic preregistration privileges if the Health Questionnaire is not returned. Records, transcripts and grades will be frozen as well.

Rock Bottom Remainders tour East Coast

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

COURTESY ROCK BOTTOM REMAINDERS, INC

The authors turned rockers shown are (in back row, from left) Gerry Peterson, saxophone; Dave Barry, Barbara Kingsolver, Matt Groening, Kathi Goldmark, Al Kooper, Tad Bartimus, Robert Fulghum, Michael Dorris, (front row, from left) Josh Kelly, drums; Stephen King, Roy Blount, Jr., Joel Selvin, Ridley Pearson, Dave Marsh, Greil Marcus and Amy Tan. Note: not all of the authors appear at every show date.

What do authors Stephen King, Dave Barry and Amy Tan all have in common? They are all in the same rock band, The Rock Bottom Remainders. Possibly one of the most literate rock bands ever assembled around off key vocalists in the name of charity and childhood fantasies, the Remainders will take their "3 Chords & an Attitude Tour" down the east coast this summer.

The Remainders, whose members include some of America's most popular authors, debuted at the American Booksellers Convention in Anaheim in the spring of 1992, creating a stir which prompted Viking Press to hand over a book advance, in order that the author/musicians would write about their experiences. The advance enabled the Remainders to go on tour with their unique musical interpretation of rock oldies, and all of the tour profits benefit Literacy Volunteers of America, the Right To Rock Network and several local literacy and First Amendment groups.

"I tell kids, if this is something your parents don't want you to read, get it immediately. It's something you ought to know about," King said, responding to to offers from a group at the First American Book Fair to censor passages from his book Firestarter so they could market it for children. The authors are serious about their music and the charities they support.

The Remainders were the brainchild of Kathi Kamen Goldmark, credited as the band's leader, founder and organizer. Goldmark, working at book publicity during the day and rock 'n' roll at night, spent much of her time driving touring authors around San Francisco.

"Some of them are so much fun to be with that conducting them from interview to interview doesn't feel like work," explains Goldmark. "We'll start digging through my vast collection of tapes. Before I know it, another new [author] friend is sitting in with my band, the Ray Price Club, at the Blue Lamp. And he or she will get the sweetest, dreamiest look and tell me how lucky I am. I decided to form a band of authors!"

The Remainders played at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton on May 21 to a capacity crowd which included a well-mixed group of oldies fans and college students, all of whom were stretching their necks to catch a glimpse of their favorite authors.

"The audience seemed to really be getting into it," said King, author of Gerald's Game, who is credited with the idea of taking the Remainders on tour. King says he played in a rock group called the Moon Spinners while in school, until "everyone ran out to listen to Bob Dylan."

Goldmark jokes about the band members. "Stephen King contributes rhythm guitar and an almost uncanny feel for teenage death songs. Dave Barry agreed to play lead guitar, if he could wear spandex. We made him wear it under his clothes."

King recounts Barry's reaction to their first performance, "Dave said, 'I don't want to think what this may mean about me, but I like this.'"

When asked about how he liked riding on the tour bus with everyone, Barry quipped, "You're getting into hygiene so soon?"

After the core vocalists and instrumentalists were put into place, Goldmark moved on to the next step. "All we lacked were loud frat-party types to sing 'Louie Louie.' The Critics' Chorus was born. Roy Blount, Matt Groening, Greil Marcus, Dave Marsh and Joel Selvin had all written books and rock criticism. With all the critics in the band who'd slam us?"

"We haven't had any serious damage to report," says Barry, author of Dave Barry Turns 40. "Ear damage, that is."

The band's tour almost came to an abrupt end when The Remainders came under an injunction. They are now under a court order to sing the right words to 'Teen Angel.' "Stephen made some small changes to the song, that's all — like adding 'vial of crack' to the lyrics," Barry said.

"We're using [the injunction] shamelessly as a publicity gimmick," said a straight-faced King. In concert, King wears a red blazer over his Red Sox t-shirt, sleeves cut off.

The band's set, which lasts over an hour and a half, is almost all rock oldies, including "Money," "Louie, Louie," "Stand By Me," and "Suzie Q." The comic approach the band takes to the music and lyrics kept the audience laughing with the authors, not at them.

As Barry continues to tune his guitar before his solo, King remarks, "If you keep picking at it, it'll never get better." It's this chemistry that makes the audience cheer, whoop and call repeatedly for "Free Bird."

Goldmark is joined in the Remainderettes by Amy Tan, author of The Joy Luck Club, in cat's eye sunglasses, and Tad Bartimus, AP Special Correspondent and author of Trinity's Children. The sequined clad Remainderettes' movements are remarkably synchronized.

Tan has several costume changes and performs the most memorable solo of the show. Adorned in a leather cap, studded choker and bracelet, Tan sang Nancy Sinatra's "These Boots Are Made For Walking" with conviction and a whip. Stomping on the Critics' Chorus, to the cheers of the crowd and wailing sax, author Tan created a picture

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES: Never mind about making plans for the future; focus on what is happening now. You need new allies. A night of generous hospitality could do wonders for your popularity.

TAURUS: A good day for paying bills and collecting what is due you. The pieces of a financial puzzle fall into place. Be careful not to make threats if you phone delinquent borrowers.

GEMINI: Topsy-turvy trends would suggest you postpone a major financial or legal move. Seniors find fulfillment through more community activity.

CANCER: Friends can be a tremendous help with a family problem. You are able to work out an agreement with those who hold opposing views. Be wise and benefit from other people's experiences.

LEO: As the month ends, you have an opportunity to finish up old projects and repay your obligations. Travel is a big no-no. Practice small economies; family members will follow your lead.

VIRGO: You could be asked some embarrassing questions today. Refuse to lie. People on thrones of authority may wish that they could abdicate before this day is over.

LIBRA: The emphasis today is on spotting any nuisances and evading them. Confronting an opponent in anger would be a mistake. Take a wait and see approach. Share secrets with family members only, they are trustworthy.

SCORPIO: An unexpected call for assistance or a loan is featured. Pending matters should be settled at once. Delays are not wise under prevailing trends. A special gift strikes the right note.

SAGITTARIUS: The pressures of a tight schedule could mount — stay calm and organized. Teamwork makes a big difference. Avoid gossip. A step-by-step approach will get you to the finish line.

CAPRICORN: Stop being so hard on yourself. Interaction with friends or close business associates will make you feel good about you skills. Your mate or partner is you strongest ally.

AQUARIUS: Listen and learn! You may discover a vital ingredient is missing from a business plan. Once you fill in the blanks, the future looks golden. Keep abreast of the times.

PISCES: You can make important new contacts today. Improve you communications skills. A loan request will be granted. Romance blossoms during the evening hours.

Events that promise to heat up Summer '93

Compiled by LISA CURTIS

The Pioneer Valley is filled with an eclectic collection of entertainment all year long, but 1993's summer crop of musicians and fairs is especially inviting. Here are this editor's picks for the most promising events coming to the Amherst area.

Clannad — This is the band that sings "Harry's Game," the song heard in the Volkswagen commercial which prompted consumers to call Volkswagen in search of "that beautiful song".

The members of Clannad include Maire (pronounced Moya) Brennan, her twin uncles Padraig (pronounced Poric) Duggan and Noel Duggan and her brother Ciaran (Keeron) Brennan. Their sister Enya, who has more name recognition in the U.S., left the group after the Clannad album, Fuiam (pronounced "foom").

At the forefront of Irish music for 20 years, Clannad will be at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton Sunday June 13 at 7 p.m.

4 Non Blondes — 4 Non Blondes has been hailed as a rock 'n' roll breakthrough, challenging ideas about music and gender. This band blends the social consciousness of acoustic folk, the rhythm of funk, the desperation of the blues and the electricity of rock into a unique and explosive sound.

Currently touring in support of their latest album Bigger, Better, Faster, More! on Interscope Records, 4 Non Blondes will perform at Pearl Street Nightclub, Monday June 14 at 8 p.m.

Freedy Johnston — From Hoboken to you. Perhaps the most passionate of acoustic rock songwriters. And who else could sing, "I used to love the Morticians daughter, we drew our hearts on the dusty coffin lids" and make you believe? Freedy Johnston will perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton Thursday June 17 at 7 p.m. Tickets are $13.50 in advance.

Frank Black — Frank Black of the Pixies has recently released a solo album titled eponymously, which contains covers for the most part. Frank Black was made with the assistance of Eric Drew Feldman (Captain Beefheart, Pere Ubu).

Frank Black will perform at Pearl Street Nightclub Saturday, June 19 at 6:30 p.m. This is an 18 and up show. Tickets are $13 in advance.

Bright Moments Festival — This festival features University of Massachusetts faculty and other guest artists, including the Billy Taylor Trio, Max Roach, Ted Dunbar and John Blake, in three outdoor performances of Jazz on the Fine Arts Center Campus Pond lawn.

worth more than a thousand words.

"My mother doesn't know I'm doing this," Bartimus said. "I sang in a church choir."

The Remainders do have a few professional musicians in their numbers besides Goldmark. Josh Kelly plays drums while Jerry Peterson dazzles audiences with his saxophone. Al Kooper, of Blues Project fame, volunteered to be musical director. Kooper is also responsible for the between song cynicism and general wise-cracking.

Ridley Pearson, author of Probable Cause and Angel Maker, also plays for a "real band." He masters the bass and sings on key for The Remainders. "He plays in bars," says wide-eyed Barry.

Barbara Kingsolver, author of Pigs in Heaven and Animal Dreams, plays keyboards and vocals. "I played in bands while in college," she said.

The Remainders' dedicated rehearsing paid off and the audience called repeatedly for encores. "We made that quantum leap to palatability," Goldmark said. "Our playing improved dramatically. Everybody really did their homework."

While on tour, The Rock Bottom Remainders will live out the rock 'n' roll fantasy of a lifetime while taking careful notes for their book, Mid-Life Confidential, to be published by Viking in 1994.

"Thank you for coming," said King. "Especially when you had no idea what to expect."

and her sister Wendy, a freshman at the University of Michigan, will compete together. The younger Marshall scored a 9.85 on vault as well.

For her efforts, Tammy Marshall was named first team All-American (all-around and floor) and was invited to the World University Games trials, which were held in early May.

Marshall continued her hot streak by finishing third at the trials, qualifying her for the Games which will be held in July in Buffalo, N.Y. She is one of six gymnasts that will be representing the U.S.A. in the second-largest international competition (second to the Summer Olympics).

■ hockey

"Our goal here is to put UMass hockey on the national map as soon as possible," Mallen said. "I remember reading in my history books that the Minutemen were defined as a group which could assemble in a short period of time. For the 1993-94 season, that is what we'll be doing."

Mallen signed a four-year contract for undisclosed terms. He represented the University at the American Hockey Coaches Convention in Naples, Fla., after which he started hiring his coaching staff.

"We need what I'd like to call a two-pronged approach," he said. "We have to have a team ready to play next year, and we have to go after the top players in the country for two years down the road, players who are high school juniors right now."

have."

Even so, Weeks, a 6-6 power forward, would be a major help next season.

• ABC and ESPN college basketball analyst Dick Vitale said if Weeks and Padilla pass the SAT, he will place UMass in his pre-season top 10; without them, the Minutemen are top 20.

• Calipari will tour Europe for a spell this summer coaching a Nike All-Star team.

UMass gymnast captures national title

UMass senior Tammy Marshall, who captured the national championship on floor exercises last April.

Perfect is defined as "flawless; lacking nothing essential."

No one was more perfect than Tammy Marshall on April 17, as the senior ended her gymnastics career at the University of Massachusetts by scoring a perfect 10.00 on the floor exercise at the NCAA Nationals held at Oregon State University to capture the national championship.

To top off her championship weekend, Marshall received what she called "one of the biggest honors in women's collegiate gymnastics" when she was awarded the AAI-American Award, given to the top senior in the country. It was based on academics, athletics and service, and was voted on by coaches across the United States.

UMass head coach Alfie Mitchell said he nominated Marshall because of what she has done for the sport of gymnastics and for the University. He said the award was especially sweet because everyone always had tried to stack the odds against her, unsuccessfully.

"Initially, people said that Tammy wasn't going to be good anymore after she hurt her knee in high school. That was one strike against her," Mitchell said. "And then they said that she was never going to do what she really wants to do going to a school like Massachusetts.

"One thing about Tammy is that when she says she is going to do something, she is going to do it. One way or another, she'll get the job done."

When it came to the finals on Saturday, Marshall was the favorite of the fans, according to Mitchell, as she won them over as soon as her floor exercise music began.

"The crowd there was amazing," Marshall said. "The athletic director from Oregon State came over to me and asked 'well, how does it feel being an outsider and somehow getting all of the fans to support you?'

"As soon as my music started, they were clapping the whole time. It was so exciting I wanted to jump up and down and stop [the routine]."

Marshall's championship routine ended with the fans holding "10" signs in unison. When the score went up, Marshall said she burst into tears. Georgia's Heather Stepp and Oregon State's Amy Durham shared the title by scoring a 10.00 as well.

The entire meet began with the preliminary competition, which is used to determine both the finalists for each individual event and the all-around championship.

Marshall finished sixth in the all-around with a school-record of 39.250, her best performance at any national meet. She received a 9.675 on beam and a 9.925 on floor.

On vault, she received a 9.85, but was one of the eleven alternates that were unable to reach the finals. According to both Marshall and Mitchell, it was expected that the University of Alabama would scratch former U.S. Olympian Kim Kelly from the finals, allowing all eleven alternates to vie for the title.

However, Kelly was not scratched until five minutes before the event began, leaving both Marshall and Kristen Kenoyer of Utah, who shared last year's vault championship, out of the finals.

Marshall's productive weekend also yielded her career best on bars, 9.80. She said that the score meant a lot to her because she hit the more difficult tricks that were added to the routine for national competition.

The meet marked the first and last time that Marshall

UMass basketball to face challenging schedule

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

When you look at the University of Massachusetts basketball schedule for next season, you may think coach John Calipari has a death wish.

Calipari, who in the past has said he tries to imitate Temple, is doing just that as he puts the finishing touches on a brutal, Owl-like, non-conference schedule.

The latest addition to the schedule is the finalization of a Feb. 6 date against Final Four participant Kentucky, to be played at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J., and aired, most likely, on ABC.

"It's a good game for us, especially because it will probably be on national television," Calipari said.

The game, a one-year contest, will be played at a neutral site because neither Kentucky coach Rick Pitino nor Calipari wanted to play on the road.

"He [Pitino] didn't want to come here and I didn't want to go to Rupp [Arena, the Wildcats' 24,000-seat home court]," Calipari said.

Calipari said he hopes to get 5,000 UMass fans to make the trip to New Jersey, which will be one of at least six nationally televised UMass games next season.

Also on the schedule is the Pre-season NIT, one of the nation's most competitive in-season tournaments, a late-November road date at Oklahoma and January road games at Cincinnati and DePaul. All three games will be shown on ESPN.

UMass will host Florida State on Feb. 13 and will also play a midnight game in January, both to be aired on ESPN.

The Abdow's Hall of Fame Classic will feature Hartford, Hofstra and Maryland, which will allow UMass sophomore Donta Bright to play against his cousin and former Baltimore Dunbar teammate Keith Booth, who recently committed to Maryland.

Calipari said he is also trying to arrange for the Boston University game, scheduled for Saturday, Dec. 4, to be played in the Boston Garden. The Holy Cross game, scheduled for Dec. 11, will be played in the Worcester Centrum. Home dates against Buffalo and Central Connecticut round out the schedule.

In 1994-95, Calipari is hoping to play Central Connecticut in the Hartford Civic Center, in an effort to provide a home game for Hartford natives Marcus Camby and Mike Williams. If that game comes off, it should please Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun to no end.

• Neither Philadelphia forward Tyrone Weeks nor Springfield guard Edgar Padilla have scored above the NCAA-mandated minimum of 700 on the SAT to make them eligible to play next season. Both are awaiting their final results, and have scored as high as 660 on previous tests.

"I think they will both make it, because they are smart kids," Calipari said. "I care more for them making it for themselves than for the team. We are going to be good next season, not very experienced, but we'll do fine with the players we

UMass tabs Mallen to coach hockey

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

They have the building, they have a conference, and finally they have hired a head coach, one who is hungry for the restart of UMass hockey.

Former Boston College assistant hockey coach Joe Mallen was named head hockey coach at the University of Massachusetts in a press conference at the William D. Mullins Memorial Center.

"It may be an understatement, but this is a dream come true for me," said Mallen. "The program at the University of Massachusetts is going to be an exciting one and one that in due time will be a force in Hockey East.

"I am excited about the opportunity and challenge. I am anxious to begin the development of a top-notch program in what has to be considered a sleeping giant in Ex-BC assistant Mallen named UMass head: hockey coach hockey land.

Mallen was named head coach by athletic director Bob Marcum, who concluded a national search for a coach to lead the rebirth of the UMass program which was suspended at the conclusion of the 1978-79 season.

"Of all the candidates who wanted this position [Mallen] was the one who wanted it most. He was the one who was most persistent," said Marcum. "If he approaches recruiting as persistently as he approached this job, I think without a doubt our hockey program's in great hands."

A 1977 graduate of Michigan State, the 37-year-old Mallen was the head coach at UMass-Boston from 1979-85, where he guided the Beacons from a club team to a Division II varsity program with a 86-48-2 record. He spent a year as an assistant at U.S. International before moving onto BC.

Mallen has been the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Director for USA Hockey's National Coaching Achievement Program since 1984. He has directed the USA Hockey Satellite Camp in Boston for the past four summers where he trained players in 16 to 18 age bracket. During the summer of 1991, he was the Eastern training coordinator for the 1992 U.S. Olympic Hockey team.
